Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

Medicine Point Lookout is an excellent example of the 1931-pattern L-4 Lookout House, originally designed by Clyde Fickes. It is located atop Medicine Point (elevation 8,405 ft), the high point in a north-south trending ridge system that overlooks the West Fork of the Bitterroot River and its tributary streams to the west, and the East Fork of the Bitterroot River and its tributary streams to the east. The only access to the lookout is from a four-mile long pack trail. The lookout structure sits atop a small talus outcrop, surrounded on the west, south, and east sides by low growing vegetation consisting of grasses and forbs. The ridgetop north of the lookout contains an open stand of whitebark pine, lodgepole pine, and subalpine fir. Most of the whitebark pine is dead. A fire in 2000 burned through the area, but spared the lookout.

Narrative Description

Medicine Point Lookout (contributing building): The Medicine Point Lookout, constructed in 1939, is a 14-foot by 14-foot wood frame lookout cab with a pyramidal roof built atop a 10-foot high log tower.¹ Simple drop wood siding covers the lower portion of the exterior walls, and the roof is covered with sawn cedar shingles with metal ridge caps. A metal stove pipe extends above the east slope of the roof at its north end. The entry into the lookout house is located at the east end of the south wall, and contains its original six-light wood door. Four nine-light windows are located in the wall west of the entry. The remaining three walls each contain five nine-light wood windows, two of which slide sideways allowing ventilation. Each of the lookout cab's four walls has two top-hinged shutters; when open, the shutter struts are affixed to the bottom rail of the catwalk railing. The building retains its lightning protection.

¹ The walls of the lookout cab are not aligned along cardinal directions, but are slightly askew.

The four legs of the cross-braced log tower are supported by cast-in-place battered concrete footings. A single-flight stairway leads from the northeast corner of the tower base to the catwalk. The stair stringers and treads are made with milled lumber. A handrail on the outside edge of the stairway has been fashioned by affixing a small pole to the base of the lookout cab at one end and the other to a vertical post. A small wooden storage box is suspended from the base of the lookout cab adjacent to the stair. It can be accessed from the top of the stair through a hinged screened cover.

In the one-room interior, the original maple floor is intact and in fair condition. The interior is fitted with a wood stand that supports an Osborne fire finder, a small wood-burning stove, a platform bed with drawers beneath for storage, a small table, and a storage bench.

Outhouse (noncontributing building): The recently-constructed outhouse is located about 185 feet north of the lookout. This one-story front-gable building measures 3.5 feet by 4 feet. It sits on a board foundation, and stones are piled around its base. The exterior walls are covered with simple drop wood siding with vertical corner board trim. Wood shingles cover the roof. The front (north) wall has a two-panel wood door.

Antenna pole (noncontributing structure): A recently-erected peeled pole is located adjacent to the northeast corner of the lookout. Antennae are affixed to the pole.

Hitching rail (noncontributing structure): A metal hitching rail, consisting of square uprights with two cylindrical cross bars is located about 105 feet north of the northwest corner of the lookout building, at the edge of the forested area.

Integrity

Medicine Point Lookout retains all seven aspects of historical integrity. The lookout is in its original location, in a remote area only accessible by trail. Its remoteness in turn contributes to its exceptional integrity of setting, feeling and association. The lookout cab and tower retain integrity of materials, workmanship and design. In addition to the lookout, the site area contains a wood frame outhouse, which is in good condition, a modern antenna pole, and a pipe metal hitching rail. A flagpole noted in the 1982 Cultural Site Record form has been removed. Also noted in the 1982 Cultural Site Record form but also missing are the orange painted rocks that were arranged to spell MED PT—presumably so that the lookout could be identified from the air. The lookout stands as an example of the once-common 1931-pattern L-4 Lookouts included in the Bitterroot National Forest's fire detection system.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

Medicine Point Lookout is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under criteria A and C, at the local and state level of significance. Under Criterion A, it is significantly associated with the US Forest Service's early fire detection program, which relied on a series of fixed lookout points from which to locate forest fires. Under Criterion C, Medicine Point Lookout is an excellent example of a 1931-pattern L-4 Lookout House.

Medicine Point Lookout meets the Registration Requirements set forth in the L-4 Fire Lookouts in the USFS Northern Region (Region 1), 1932-1967 Multiple Property Document and the associated contexts The Role of the L-4 Lookout House in the Development of the US Forest Service Region 1's Fire Detection System and Fire Lookout Development on the Bitterroot National Forest. The period of significance for the Medicine Point Lookout is 1939-1967, within the defined period of significance of the MPD cover form, 1932-1967. The Bitterroot National Forest added Medicine Point Lookout to its fixed point fire detection system in 1939, the beginning of the period of significance, and used it through 1967, the end of the historical period as defined in the MPD cover form. It is currently used as a cabin rental.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

The earliest reference to Medicine Point as a place for fixed fire detection comes from a 1933 edition of the Bitterroot National Forest map with hand-written notations for the 1936 fire season. Medicine Point is shown as one of seven lookout points within the old East Fork District.² The six other points included: Sula Peak, Hill Top, McCart, Clifford Ridge (a.k.a. Clifford Peak), Fish Lake, and another located just northwest of the East Fork Ranger Station, near present day Teepee Point.³ Medicine Point, Sula Peak, Hill Top, and McCart were designated “minimum season,” lookouts. Fish Lake and Clifford Ridge represented the two “average season” lookouts, while the unnamed lookout just north of the ranger station was designated an “emergency” lookout point.⁴ With the possible exception of the establishment of temporary tent camps, none of the lookout points in the East Fork District had been improved.

When Elers Koch conducted an inspection of the Bitterroot Forest in 1937, he found nine established lookout points on the East Fork District, seven regular (primary) lookout points and two secondary (emergency) points.⁵ In order to catch up with the other forests in the region, Regional Forester Evan Kelley, suggested that Forest Supervisor Brandborg make use of Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) crews to erect the L-4 kits.⁶ Apparently, Brandborg agreed with Kelley’s suggestion, as two years later, CCC crews assisted in the construction of a 1931-pattern L-4 lookout atop Medicine Point.

While the forest abandoned many of its stationary lookout points after the adoption of air patrols, on the Sula District, Medicine Point and its neighbor, Sula Peak Lookout (located just 5.5 miles north), continued to be manned on a regular basis. This appears to have been due largely to limits to funding air patrols. In 1954, the forest’s regular flights could cover the remote, deeply incised canyons of the Idaho side of the forest (mostly the Moose Creek and Magruder areas of the West Fork District), “time and gas,” prevented the flight from including the Sula District, from Medicine Point eastward to the forest boundary on the Pintler divide. Instead, Sula Peak and Medicine Point lookouts provided most of the fire detection on the district: Sula Peak covered the “man caused fire area very well,” including all of the district’s road and picnic areas, plus the Highway 93 corridor. Medicine Point had the only FM relay station on the district, allowing it to communicate with the patrol plane and to relay messages for the adjacent West

² Note that the East Fork District was renamed the Sula District in the 1940s.

³ Comparison of a 1933 base map of the Bitterroot National Forest with the 2015 edition map of the forest indicates that the unnamed lookout was located in the vicinity of the modern Teepee Point Lookout, built in 1984. 1933 Bitterroot National Forest Map, with handwritten notations for 1936 season. Fork District. It also had "... the best overall long-range detection point" on the district. The combined seen area of the two lookouts covered between 10 and 30 air miles including very deep canyons choked with heavy lodgepole pine downfall. In some areas, smoke would have to rise 3,000 feet before being detected by the lookouts stationed at Sula Peak and Medicine Point.⁷

Medicine Point continued to be staffed through the 1960s: In 1967, it was one of sixteen lookouts manned forest-wide. Others on the Sula District included Sula Peak, and McCart.⁸ By the mid 1970s, however, Medicine Point was downgraded to an emergency lookout—manned only during extreme fire seasons.

In 1998, the forest began restoring Medicine Point Lookout. Many Bitterroot Valley businesses contributed materials and volunteers conducted much of the work. The forest installed a bronze plaque on the southeast concrete footing, acknowledging the participants in the restoration. Following the completion of the restoration effort, Medicine Point Lookout was added to the forest's cabin rental program. The current outhouse is a modern building constructed according to a historic plan and cannot be counted as a contributing building.

Abstract/Summary Comments: The Medicine Point Lookout is of state level significance under National Register Criteria A and C in the areas of Conservation, Politics/Government, Architecture and Engineering. The modest, wood and glass enclosed building represents an excellent example of a 1931-pattern, L-4 type Forest Service lookout, in this case a 14' x 14' cabin set atop a 10' log support tower, erected by the CCC. The 1939 lookout is associated with the Forest Service's significant early twentieth century regional fire detection and conservation programs. The property meets the Registration Requirements of the associated MPS.
