Linnaean Hill, built in 1823, by Joshua Pierce was named in honor of the Sweedish botanist Karl Van Linnaeus, because the area was so conducive to the raising and growing of shrubs and flowers. The Pierces were extremely interested in horticulture and, shortly after establishing their home at Linnaean Hill, developed it into one of the most beautiful garden spots in the city.

Joshua Pierce also introduced box gardens to Washington. He supplied the first ornamental plantings for the White House, the Capitol and other government buildings and parks. Pierce also maintained the first general nursery in Washington.

Linnaean Hill also became a gathering place for some of Washington's society, notably Daniel Webster, John C. Calhoun, and Henry Clay.

Joshua Pierce died childless and left his estate to a nephew, Joshua Pierce Klingle, who occupied the house with his wife until 1890 when the mansion and grounds were purchased by the U.S. government as a part of Rock Creek Park. In 1937, through PWA funds the house and grounds were restored and leased as a private residence until 1952. From 1956 to 1959, the Junior Nature Center leased Klingle Mansion and, in 1959, it was leased to the Junior League of Washington for its administrative offices. In 1972, the Pierce-Klingle Mansion was again taken over by the National Park Service for use in the green scene programs.
