DESCRIPTION

The Oakland nomination consists of two contributing buildings, the house and doctor's office; one contributing structure, the springhouse; and two contributing objects, a rock stile and rock trough. The nominated property contains 12.44 acres and is located four miles east of the Gallatin City Limits on the north side of Hartsville Pike (State Route 25) in the second Civil District of Sumner County, Tennessee.

Oakland (the Dr. Daniel Wade Mentlo House), constructed about 1850, is a five bay, two story, Federal with Greek Revival influences brick house with an ell on the west side which is two stories in height one room behind the main block and extends northward four additional rooms a single story in height. All windows on the main block and two story ell are large six-over-six double-hung windows, with wooden lintels and sills. The lintels have projecting decorative square blocks at each end. The facade of the southerly facing, two story, main block is laid in a running bond pattern. All other elevations are laid in American common bond. The foundation of the facade is dressed cut-stone rather than the rough finished stone of the other elevations.

Centered on the symmetrical facade is a one story Greek Revival entrance portico. Its deep pediment is supported by four square pillars at the front and two pilasters at the rear abutting the brick wall of the main block. The pillars are connected at the front and sides by the original spindled handrail. The portico, like the main block, rests on a dressed cut-stone foundation. It is approached over its original cut-stone steps. A standing seam metal roof covers both the portico and the house. Entrance to the house is through a double leaf door with a double leaf screen door. The entrance is surmounted by an eight light transom and flanked by three light sidelights over a blind panel. Notable features of the facade include a central window with sidelights on the upper story with a peaked lintel, and a denticulated cornice board.

The two gable end chimneys on the east and west sides of the main block of the house are primarily flush gable chimneys that protrude one course width of brick from the end walls. A third chimney is centered on the north wall of the two story ell, but does not protrude from this wall. A fourth chimney is located in the service ell.

There are no windows on the east elevation of the main block. A brick shed, circa 1910, north of the chimney on the east elevation of the main block covers stone steps, circa 1850, which lead down to a one room cellar.

Two windows of six-over-six double-hung sash on the second story of the east elevation of the ell overlook the original rear porch which has been enclosed, circa 1965, with wide horizontal boards to provide space for a modern kitchen. The original porch pillars were retained and are visible in their original position. A glass paned enclosure, also circa 1965, connects the porch/kitchen to the one story ell section. Walking northward from the glass paned enclosure, there is a full length window, installed circa 1965, which may originally have been a doorway which lights the "family kitchen." A glass paned door, with sidelights and transom which opens into the "lower kitchen," and two side-by-side permanently closed garage doors of about 1940 vintage. These doors were installed when the northernmost room, originally the smokehouse, was converted to a garage. Presumably the original entrance to the smokehouse was on this elevation where the garage doors are now positioned.

The eastern side of the north elevation of the upper story of the main block is lighted by two windows centered over a window and door on the lower story. The door replaced an original window, circa 1970. There are no windows on the north elevation of the second story of the ell, but the north elevation of the one story ell extension has a door on the east side and a window on the west. There were originally no openings on this wall. They were made when the smokehouse was converted to a garage circa 1940. In 1991 the space was finished as living space.

The smokehouse is now lighted on the west elevation by a small window overlooking a brick lean-to addition of mid-twentieth century construction. The lean-to houses a furnace and water heater in the north half and contains storage space and shelves for canned goods on the south. A glass paned door south of the window overlooking the lean-to addition on the west elevation of the service ell opens into the lower kitchen. Walking south toward the main block two windows of six-over-six double-hung sash, smaller than those of the main block, light the family kitchen and pantry respectively in the service ell. Two windows of six-over-six double-hung sash punctuate the west wall of the lower story of the two story ell (dining room). A window of equal size lights the northwest corner of the main block on the west elevation. This arrangement is repeated on the second story. The denticulated cornice treatment is repeated on the second story of the west elevation. Continuity of brick color and bonding technology coupled with the presence of some remaining mortar pencilling indicate that the service ell and the main block were constructed contemporaneously.

The interior of the main block of the house boasts a central hall plan with twenty foot square flanking rooms. The original staircase of the hall ascends the west wall to a landing on the north wall then turns south to rise to the second floor landing. The staircase has a cherry handrail and octagonal newel post. The square painted spindles are also cherry and were originally finished naturally.

A parlor is situated to the east of the hall. Each window in the parlor and the family room across the hall has an inset paneled wainscot beneath the sash. All doors and windows on the interior of the main block are surrounded by shouldered architraves of Greek Revival style.

The dining room is located immediately north of the family room in the ell. A staircase in the southeast corner ascends the south wall to a small bedchamber or library above. A built-in cupboard stands to the west of a fireplace centered on the wall. The dining room contains a chair rail. It is the only room in the house with this feature. The window and door moldings of this room are more simple than those of the main block with their unassuming angled moldings. The arrangement of the dining room is repeated in the room above except that a cupboard on the either side of the fireplace is used rather than a cupboard and door arrangement.

One exits the dining room through a door on the north wall to the east of the fireplace. This door leads into the one story portion of the ell. The primary function of the ell as a service wing is suggested as one steps down one flight into a small passage. A door on the west wall of the passage leads to the pantry which was converted to a bathroom about 1965. Double doors on the east lead to a glass enclosed breakfast nook created by enclosing the area between the original rear porch and these doors which originally led out into the yard. This nook was created about 1965 and was designed by Robert Rodgers, A.I.A., Nashville.

Through the door on the north wall of the passage is the "family kitchen." This room contains a large rock and brick fireplace and originally served as the primary kitchen of the farm. Prior to 1950, the fireplace was screened off and was eventually hidden by sheet rock in the 1960s. It has recently been exposed and plans are to restore it to its original appearance. A door to the east of the fireplace opens onto steps leading down to the lower kitchen. A door cut into the north wall of the lower kitchen in the mid-twentieth century provides access to the smokehouse.

Significant interior features include the original central hall staircase, dining room staircase, doors and windows, their respective moldings, base boards, floors, and dining room chair rail.

The house has experienced some alteration. A fire in the parlor, circa 1970 necessitated the replacement of that floor and the original mantelpiece. While in the process of making post-fire repairs, a door was installed in the westernmost window opening of the north wall of the parlor.

A small bathroom has been installed (circa 1965) behind the door below the landing of the central hall staircase on the north wall, intruding on the original rear porch space. A second bath was created on the second floor landing by constructing a partition wall across the landing on a east-west axis about the same time. Only one original mantle remains in the house; a simple mantelpiece in the room above the dining room, but photographs taken in the early part of this century will provide a pattern for accurate duplications of the original Greek Revival mantelpieces. The original mantles were removed about 1970. Eastlake mantles from a local house were installed at that time. The Eastlake mantles have recently been removed so that duplicates of the original mantels may be installed.

The pantry has been outfitted as a bathroom. The window on the east wall of the family kitchen was probably originally a door. The walls of the lower kitchen were paneled in the 1960s. It is thought that this room may have originally been open on the east side and provided a covered household work space for the family and its servants. This is based on the presence of the surviving threshold which is the full width of the present glass enclosed wall, which appears to have been designed to blend harmoniously with the breakfast nook added about 1965.

The original smokehouse has been finished to provide additional living space. As stated earlier, it appears to have originally been entered by way of the east elevation where permanently closed garage-style doors are now installed.

The second contributing building is the weatherboard doctor's office, circa 1850, located in the southeast corner of the yard. This one room building is entered through a door centered on the west wall between two six-over-six double-hung windows. A brick chimney is centered on the north wall. The east elevation contains a single six-over-six double-hung window centered on the wall. The south elevation contains a single door centered on the wall which has been permanently closed. This building has a wood rail and baseboard. Early twentieth century photos of the property show a dependency of equal size in the southwest corner facing the office. The second building is thought to have been the carriage house.

The third contributing structure is the stone springhouse (circa 1850) located on the north property line near the east side. This simple building contains an opening on the west side for entering the springhouse and a small window on the east side. Its roof has been replaced.

The property has two contributing objects contemporary with and original to the house. They are a rock stile west of the house and rock trough at the well pump east of the house. Both objects, circa 1850, remain in their original location.

Noncontributing resources on the property include a circa 1920 garage east of the house, a circa 1920 chicken house north of the house, a circa 1890 ice house in the east yard, and the family cemetery to the east of the house. Circa 1960 a formal garden was planted on the east side of the house. All the noncontributing are outside the period of significance.

SIGNIFICANCE

Oakland is being nominated under National Register criterion B for its historical association with Dr. Daniel Wade Mentlo, physician and community leader in eastern Sumner County. The property is also being nominated under Criterion C for its architectural significance as one of the three surviving five-bay brick houses constructed in Sumner County by master builder, John Fonville.

Daniel Wade Mentlo (March 1, 1805 - February 23, 1870) moved to the town of Hartsville in eastern Sumner (now Trousdale) County, Tennessee when he was a young man. Mentlo's observation of an epidemic afflicting the citizens of that town in the summer and fall of 1826 became the basis of his inaugural thesis, "The Fever of Tennessee," which he submitted to the trustees and medical professors of Transylvania University in March 1827 as a candidate for the Doctor of Medicine. After graduating, Mentlo set up his practice in Hartsville where he was active in political and social affairs. He was one of eleven "managers" of a ball honoring Andrew Jackson held at Captain Duffy's, in Hartsville, July 5, 1828. (Durham & Thomas, p. 138) In 1839, Mentlo helped solicit a new superintendent for the Hartsville Male Academy for which he served as a trustee. (Durham, Old Sumner, p. 320)

By 1841 Mentlo had moved to Gallatin, the county seat of Sumner County. That year he occupied lots 111, 112, 113, 114, and 115 on the eastern end of town. (Deed Book 18, page 40 ROSCT) That year he joined four other Sumner County physicians endorsing "the patent truss in the hands of Captain John Wallace" for the alleviation of hernias. (Durham, Old Sumner, p. 165) In June 1843 Mentlo began to purchase acreage east of Gallatin, on the Hartsville Pike. By 1848, he had bought almost 650 acres. It was on this land that he had his brick home, Oakland, built. The small frame office in the southeast corner of the yard served as his doctor's office.

According to the 1850 census, Mentlo owned twenty-three slaves, which were put chiefly to work on the farm. In 1860 over half of his 600 plus acres, 350 were improved. His land holdings were appraised at $33,000 in the Agricultural Census taken that year. Livestock on the farm in 1860 included: twenty-seven horses, eighty asses and mules, twenty milk cows, two oxen, twenty head of cattle, twenty sheep, and 225 swine. Mentlo grew 250 bushels of wheat, 150 bushels of oats, and 4500 bushels of corn. Produce grown on the farm included: peas and beans, Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, and sundry orchard products.

Oakland was constructed for Daniel Wade Mentlo (March 1, 1804 - February 23, 1870), a Sumner County physician. Dr. Mentlo graduated from Transylvania University's medical department in 1827 after submitting his inaugural thesis, "The Fever of Tennessee," which documented an epidemic afflicting Hartsivlle in eastern Sumner County he observed in 1826.

After practicing for several years in Hartsville, Mentlo moved to the county seat, Gallatin, where he occupied Lots 111, 112, 113, 114, and 115 on the eastern edge of the town (Deed Book 18, page 40, ROSCT).

In June 1843 Mentlo began to purchase acreage east of Gallatin, on the Hartsville Pike. By 1848, he had bought almost 650 acres. It was on this land that he built Oakland. The small frame office in the southeast corner of the yard, constructed contemporaneously, served as his doctor's office.

In addition to his medical practice, Mentlo conducted a rather successful farm operation at Oakland. According to the 1850 census, 23 slaves were working on the farm at mid century. In 1860 over half of Oakland's 600+ acres, 350, were improved. Mentlo's total land holdings were appraised at $44,000 in Agricultural Census taken that year. Livestock on the farm in 1860 included: 27 horses, 80 asses and mules, 20 milk cows, 2 oxen, 20 head of cattle, 20 sheep, and 225 swine, Mentlo grew 250 bushels of wheat, 150 bushels of oats, and 4500 bushels of corn. Produce grown on the farm included: peas and beans, Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, and sundry orchard products.

Dr. Mentlo is buried in the family plot east of the house with his wife, Mary Brandon Mentlo (May 11, 1811 - October 19, 1865) nee Alexander, who he married March 18, 1828. They had one child, James A. Mentlo (June 13, 1833 - August 10, 1896), who occupied the house after his father's death. Mrs. Sam Anderson (nee Susie Mentlo), James' daughter, occupied the house after James' death until she died in 1961, when the house finally passed out of the family.
