DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This church "was fashioned after the Norman churches of the fifteenth century and is of flat Gothic style." The building is rectangular, 42 feet x 25 feet, with a 75-foot high tower. It is an ashlar stone structure with a gable roof on the main building and a pyramidal roof on the tower. Stone buttresses divide the sides into numerous bays. The louvered openings in the tower (two per side) and the side stained glass windows have stone gothic arches. There is a large stained glass window with stone tracery on the west side of the building. A small entrance on the north side of the building has a gable roof. The main entrance is recessed in an arch at the base of the tower on the east side of the building. Stone steps spiral up the northeast corner of the tower to provide access to the choir loft over the altar area; the round secondary tower on the north side of the main tower contains the steps. Other exterior features include several narrow rectangular openings in the spiral stairway and on the east facade; these have square or gothic-arched tops. A stone water table separates the sanctuary level from the stone foundation. There is a chimney on the west end of the building. The tower is visible for several miles.

The interior contains beautiful woodwork with a wood vaulted ceiling, gothic arches over the doors to the narthex behind the altar area, and a gothic arch over the organ pipes on the east end. Eighteen-foot high oak doors separate the main sanctuary from the back area of the church; these doors are also set in a gothic arch. When closed, the doors shut off the memorial window on the west end from the main sanctuary; the west end was designed for Sunday School rooms and class rooms. The 35 x 60 feet sanctuary has a seating capacity of 500.

Changes in the church building have been well documented by Ms. Brocklesby. A new oak floor was laid in the basement of the building in 1931, replacing the original oak floor. The church was connected to the city's water system in 1951. In 1952 symbols were put in each section of the windows in the back of the balcony. Rest rooms were installed in the back of the sanctuary area in 1952-1953. A carillon was installed and played for the first time during the 1968 Christmas season; the carillon was given by Mrs. Bruce (Martha Harrison) Mayer in honor of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Harrison. The carillon was officially dedicated on May 11, 1969. In 1970 an electric organ was installed to replace the original pipe organ, but the organ pipes have remained in place. The wood basement floor was replaced with cement in 1970, also, with tile later added over it. The basement kitchen area and the sanctuary have been refurbished several times, with new carpeting, paint, kitchen cabinets, etc., but none of this has harmed the architectural integrity of the church's interior.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This building is significant as an example of Gothic religious architecture and as an example of the philanthropy of Anna M. Richardson Harkness. The church's 1976 history notes that "the church is considered one of the most beautiful churches in the state and probably the most costly structure for a town its size in the country." It is the most important building, architecturally, in this small community on the eastern border of Marion County.

The first religious society in Claridon Township was organized in the fall of 1820, shortly after the first settlers arrived. This was a Methodist group. After meeting in homes for several years, the first church building, a log structure, was erected in 1824 south of the settlement that was later to be named VanBuskirk. A Methodist Society was organized in 1830, and five years later, the members decided to build a Methodist Episcopal Church in the northeast corner of the settlement of VanBuskirk; the cost was $800. The town of VanBuskirk itself was platted in 1834, and the name was changed to Caledonia the following year. The church was served by Methodist circuit riders during the early years.

In 1861, the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church were authorized to sell the old church property and apply the balance, after paying debts, to a new building. By 1863, the congregation had erected "a substantial frame building, 40 x 50', valued at $2200" at the southwest corner of South and Main Streets in Caledonia. A Sunday School was organized in each circuit in 1867, with Caledonia becoming part of the Galion circuit in this year. The Caledonia Sabbath School Society had twelve classes by 1871.

Also in 1871, Dr. George Tryon Harding and his family moved to Caledonia, living in a house across the street north of the church. The Harding family lived here from 1871 to 1882, and Dr. Harding served as a trustee of the church in 1874. Warren G. Harding was a member of this congregation while his family lived in Caledonia, but he left in 1877 to attend college. The congregation is still quite proud of the fact that a President of the United States was a member of their church.

The story of this particular church building began on January 24, 1908, when Reverend James Gray, pastor of the Caledonia Methodist Episcopal Church, received a letter from Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness stating that she would like to present or erect a Memorial Library Building in Caledonia in memory of her mother, Mrs. A. Maria Ranck Richardson Underwood. A. Maria Ranck Richardson was the wife of John Underwood, the son of John and Sarah Fisher Underwood; the Underwoods were early settlers in the township and moved to Caledonia in 1868; their descendants are still active in the church. Anna Marie Richardson, daughter of A. Maria Ranck and I.R. Richardson, was born near Upper Sandusky on October 25, 1837; her father deserted her when she was a few weeks old, and her mother later married Underwood. Anna M. Richardson married Stephen V. Harkness, a merchant in Caledonia, in 1852. The Harknesses then moved to Monroeville, Ohio, where Stephen was a harness maker. Eventually, he became involved in the distillery business and gained enough money to invest in Standard Oil stock. He was one of the incorporators of Standard Oil in 1870 when the company was formed with a capital of $1,000,000; the other incorporators were J.D. Rockefeller, Henry M. Flagler, and Samuel Andrews. Harkness also owned the Harkness Block in Cleveland, located on the southwest corner of Euclid and Wilson in 1876. He was Cleveland's wealthiest man, according to the church's history; he died in 1888 leaving his wife with an estate of $50,000,000. When she died in 1926, the estate had grown to $85,000,000, the "largest ever taxed in New York State up to this date."

Mrs. Harkness also donated the Florence Harkness Memorial Chapel at the College for Women in Cleveland and the Harkness Memorial Quadrangle at Yale in memory of her son Charles. Her son Edward Stephen Harkness was a trustee of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Presbyterian Hospital in New York City; he was also a large donor to Harvard, hospitals, medical research centers, schools, and churches.

Mrs. Harkness' offer to build a library in Caledonia was first accepted, and then declined. She then offered to build a Memorial Church for the Methodist Episcopal congregation and appointed her brother-in-law, T.J. Anderson, to represent her at the church since he was a member of the congregation. The church offer was made on the condition that the congregation pledge itself to keep the building in good repair "for all times to come."

The church board unanimously accepted Mrs. Harkness' offer and made plans to sell the building it was then using and have it moved from the site, so that the new building could also be located at the southwest corner of South and Main Streets. The church and contents were sold at public auction on June 6, 1908, with the short seat in front of the chimney, where Mrs. Harkness' mother always sat, saved and presented to Mrs. Harkness in memory of her mother. The church building was moved to a farm three miles north of Caledonia and was still in use on the farm in 1976.

Work began on the new building on July 15, 1908, with 1700 yards of earth removed in 20 days. A.M. Dilts was the excavating contractor. The architect for the building was Abram Garfield, ^{the} a distant ^{son} relative of President James Abram Garfield. The contractor was J. Wentworth Smith, the architect's foreman John Boldt, and the contractor's foreman David G. George; all were from Cleveland, Ohio. The stone dressers were Scottish workers from Cleveland.

The cornerstone of the new building was laid on October 24, 1908 by Mrs. T.J. Anderson, Mrs. Harkness' sister. This was apparently a big civic activity with services held in the town hall and all businesses in the community closed for two hours. The church historian notes that "This was one of the greatest events ever to occur in the village of Caledonia." Work continued through the winter with the last stone laid on the tower on April 23, 1909.

Dedication services for the church began on October 9, 1909 and lasted through October 15. Mrs. Harkness was present for these activities. Pastor James Gray headed the list of ministers participating; this included all living former ministers of the church.

Mrs. Harkness continued to donate funds to the congregation, including several thousand dollars in bonds and securities (only the interest could be used). She also later gave the church money for a new parsonage (across street from church, not architecturally eligible for National Register). In her will, she left $15,000 in bonds for the church.

The Methodist Episcopal Church became part of the Methodist Church with the denominational merger of 1939. The Memorial Church's name again changed in 1968 with another denominational merger, this time to the present name, Memorial United Methodist Church. The "Memorial" name had been officially adopted in 1909 to recognize Mrs. Harkness' gift.

One final note on the importance of Anna Harkness comes from the rules and regulations for the janitor of the church that were issued on March 16, 1915: "A thorough cleaning of the church to be made the first day of May each year before Mrs. Harkness makes her annual visit to Caledonia. This must include a thorough cleaning of the stone sills and jams of the windows together with the cleaning of the ceiling. For this well done the church will pay the sum of $5.00."

This building, then, is important for its architecture and as an example of the philanthropy of the Harkness family. Its history is very well documented in the book noted in #9, and all quotations and information is from that source.

REVISED STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

15 JUNE 1979

This church is significant because it is an excellent example of the Gothic Revival style of architecture as practiced in the early twentieth century. It is by far the most prominent building in this small rural community, and it is a well known architectural landmark in Caledonia, a town that is made up primarily of unpretentious frame houses and a few brick storefronts. The church's 1976 history notes that "the church is considered one of the most beautiful churches in the state and probably the most costly structure for a town its size in the country." The church's Gothic features are seen in the central stone tower with the gothic-arched louvered vents, turrets at the base of the tower, buttresses on all four walls, and gothic-arched stained glass windows. The beautiful wood vaulted ceiling in the sanctuary and the gothic arches over the doors to the narthex behind the altar, over the organ pipes on the east end, and over the massive 18-foot high oak doors separating the main sanctuary from the back section all help carry out the Gothic Revival style of the exterior.

This church is also significant as an example of the work of Abram Garfield, one of Cleveland's premier architects from 1898 to the 1940s. Garfield was the son of President James A. Garfield, and his autobiography contains the statement that "My work was largely residential . . . There was a church in Caledonia, Ohio." Garfield's involvement in this isolated community came because of the philanthropy of the Harkness family that resulted in this fine building for Caledonia. Garfield also designed the Garfield Library in Mentor (Lake County) Ohio, a building also listed on the National Register of Historic Places, so his work has already been recognized as important by the Register.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This church "was fashioned after the Norman churches of the fifteenth century and is of flat Gothic style." The building is rectangular, 42 feet x 125 feet, with a 75-foot high tower. It is an ashlar stone structure with a gable roof on the main building and a pyramidal roof on the tower. Stone buttresses divide the sides into numerous bays. The louvered openings in the tower (two per side) and the side stained glass windows have stone gothic arches. There is a large stained glass window with stone tracery on the west side of the building. A small entrance on the north side of the building has a gable roof. The main entrance is recessed in an arch at the base of the tower on the east side of the building. Stone steps spiral up the northeast corner of the tower to provide access to the choir loft over the altar area; the round secondary tower on the north side of the main tower contains the steps. Other exterior features include several narrow rectangular openings in the spiral stairway and on the east facade; these have square or gothic-arched tops. A stone water table separates the sanctuary level from the stone foundation. There is a chimney on the west end of the building. The tower is visible for several miles.

The interior contains beautiful woodwork with a wood vaulted ceiling, gothic arches over the doors to the narthex behind the altar area, and a gothic arch over the organ pipes on the east end. Eighteen-foot high oak doors separate the main sanctuary from the back area of the church; these doors are also set in a gothic arch. When closed, the doors shut off the memorial window on the west end from the main sanctuary; the west end was designed for Sunday School rooms and class rooms. The 35 x 60 feet sanctuary has a seating capacity of 500.

Changes in the church building have been well documented by Ms. Brocklesby. A new oak floor was laid in the basement of the building in 1931, replacing the original oak floor. The church was connected to the city's water system in 1951. In 1952 symbols were put in each section of the windows in the back of the balcony. Rest rooms were installed in the back of the sanctuary area in 1952-1953. A carillon was installed and played for the first time during the 1968 Christmas season; the carillon was given by Mrs. Bruce (Martha Harrison) Mayer in honor of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Harrison. The carillon was officially dedicated on May 11, 1969. In 1970 an electric organ was installed to replace the original pipe organ, but the organ pipes have remained in place. The wood basement floor was replaced with cement in 1970, also, with tile later added over it. The basement kitchen area and the sanctuary have been refurbished several times, with new carpeting, paint, kitchen cabinets, etc., but none of this has harmed the architectural integrity of the church's interior.

healthiest man, according to the church's history; he died in 1888 leaving his wife with an estate of $50,000,000. When she died in 1926, the estate had grown to $85,000,000, the largest ever taxed in New York State up to this date."

Mrs. Harkness also donated the Florence Harkness Memorial Chapel at the College for Women in Cleveland and the Harkness Memorial Quadrangle at Yale in memory of her son Charles. Her son Edward Stephen Harkness was a trustee of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Presbyterian Hospital in New York City; he was also a large donor to Harvard, hospitals, medical research centers, schools, and churches.

Mrs. Harkness' offer to build a library in Caledonia was first accepted, and then declined. She then offered to build a Memorial Church for the Methodist Episcopal congregation and appointed her brother-in-law, T.J. Anderson, to represent her at the church since he was a member of the congregation. The church offer was made on the condition that the congregation pledge itself to keep the building in good repair "for all times to come."

The church board unanimously accepted Mrs. Harkness' offer and made plans to sell the building it was then using and have it moved from the site, so that the new building could also be located at the southwest corner of South and Main Streets. The church and contents were sold at public auction on June 6, 1908, with the short seat in front of the chimney, where Mrs. Harkness' mother always sat, saved and presented to Mrs. Harkness in memory of her mother. The church building was moved to a farm three miles north of Caledonia and was still in use on the farm in 1976.

Work began on the new building on July 15, 1908, with 1700 yards of earth removed in 20 days. A.M. Dilts was the excavating contractor. The architect for the building was Abram Garfield, a distant relative of President James Abram Garfield. The contractor was J. Wentworth Smith, the architect's foreman John Boldt, and the contractor's foreman David G. George; all were from Cleveland, Ohio. The stone dressers were Scottish workers from Cleveland.

The cornerstone of the new building was laid on October 24, 1908 by Mrs. T.J. Anderson, Mrs. Harkness' sister. This was apparently a big civic activity with services held in the town hall and all businesses in the community closed for two hours. The church historian notes that "This was one of the greatest events ever to occur in the village of Caledonia." Work continued through the winter with the last stone laid on the tower on April 23, 1909.

Dedication services for the church began on October 9, 1909 and lasted through October 15. Mrs. Harkness was present for these activities. Pastor James Gray headed the list of ministers participating; this included all living former ministers of the church.

Mrs. Harkness continued to donate funds to the congregation, including several thousand dollars in bonds and securities (only the interest could be used). She also later gave the church money for a new parsonage (across street from church, not architecturally eligible for National Register). In her will, she left $15,000 in bonds for the church.

The Methodist Episcopal Church became part of the Methodist Church with the denominational merger of 1939. The Memorial Church's name again changed in 1968 with another denominational merger, this time to the present name, Memorial United Methodist Church. The "Memorial" name had been officially adopted in 1909 to recognize Mrs. Harkness' gift.

One final note on the importance of Anna Harkness comes from the rules and regulations for the janitor of the church that were issued on March 16, 1915: "A thorough cleaning of the church to be made the first day of May each year before Mrs. Harkness makes her annual visit to Caledonia. This must include a thorough cleaning of the stone sills and jams of the windows together with the cleaning of the ceiling. For this well done the church will pay the sum of $5.00."

This building, then, is important for its architecture and as an example of the philanthropy of the Harkness family. Its history is very well documented in the book noted in #9, and all quotations and information is from that source.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This building is significant as an example of Gothic religious architecture and as an example of the philanthropy of Anna M. Richardson Harkness. The church's 1976 history notes that "the church is considered one of the most beautiful churches in the state and probably the most costly structure for a town its size in the country." It is the most important building, architecturally, in this small community on the eastern border of Marion County.

The first religious society in Claridon Township was organized in the fall of 1820, shortly after the first settlers arrived. This was a Methodist group. After meeting in homes for several years, the first church building, a log structure, was erected in 1824 south of the settlement that was later to be named VanBuskirk. A Methodist Society was organized in 1830, and five years later, the members decided to build a Methodist Episcopal Church in the northeast corner of the settlement of VanBuskirk; the cost was $800. The town of VanBuskirk itself was platted in 1834, and the name was changed to Caledonia the following year. The church was served by Methodist circuit riders during the early years.

In 1861, the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church were authorized to sell the old church property and apply the balance, after paying debts, to a new building. By 1863, the congregation had erected "a substantial frame building, 40 x 50', valued at $2200" at the southwest corner of South and Main Streets in Caledonia. A Sunday School was organized in each circuit in 1867, with Caledonia becoming part of the Galion circuit in this year. The Caledonia Sabbath School Society had twelve classes by 1871.

Also in 1871, Dr. George Tryon Harding and his family moved to Caledonia, living in a house across the street north of the church. The Harding family lived here from 1871 to 1882, and Dr. Harding served as a trustee of the church in 1874. Warren G. Harding was a member of this congregation while his family lived in Caledonia, but he left in 1877 to attend college. The congregation is still quite proud of the fact that a President of the United States was a member of their church.

The story of this particular church building began on January 24, 1908, when Reverend James Gray, pastor of the Caledonia Methodist Episcopal Church, received a letter from Mrs. Stephen V. Harkness stating that she would like to present or erect a Memorial Library Building in Caledonia in memory of her mother, Mrs. A. Maria Ranck Richardson Underwood. A. Maria Ranck Richardson was the wife of John Underwood, the son of John and Sarah Fisher Underwood; the Underwoods were early settlers in the township and moved to Caledonia in 1868; their descendants are still active in the church. Anna Marie Richardson daughter of A. Maria Ranck and I.R. Richardson, was born near Upper Sandusky on October 25, 1837; her father deserted her when she was a few weeks old, and her mother later married Underwood. Anna M. Richardson married Stephen V. Harkness, a merchant in Caledonia in 1852. The Harknesses then moved to Monroeville, Ohio, where Stephen was a harness maker. Eventually, he became involved in the distillery business and gained enough money to invest in Standard Oil stock. He was one of the incorporators of Standard Oil in 1870 when the company was formed with a capital of $1,000,000; the other incorporators were J.D. Rockefeller, Henry M. Flagler, and Samuel Andrews. Harkness also owned the Harkness Block in Cleveland, located on the southwest corner of Euclid and Wilson in 1876. He was Cleveland's
