Three-level hillside house with entrance from street on top level. The walls of the house and balcony rails are of gunite (thin concrete blown from hose) and painted white; the large openings are filled in with continuous steelframed sash 3' 5" wide(the module for the house) in banks of different heights. One large glazed area on the south lights a 2-story high stair well. The alternating and overlapping bands of white concrete and dark glazing gives a hollowed out effect to the facades. A strongly horizontal note is maintained by the calternating bands, and on the south facade depth is achieved by the different planes of the balconies.

The third level entrance leads to a hall with a view through the 2-story high glass wall to the hills, the city and the ocean in the distance; on this level is a den and the bedrooms. m The open stairs lead to the 2nd level living room, which occupies most of the south side; this flows into a library on the SE, a step down from the living room level; the dining room is on the NE; living room flows into dining room; also on the second level are kitchen, service room and maid's A door connects the living room to a second level room The first level, the lowest, has a play room, launterrace. dry, service room and a swimming pool, partially roofed but unwalled.

The interior as well as exterior falls into the industrial aesthetic of the 1920s, which made use of machined materials wherever possible. The steel frame of the house is exposed in the columns of the living room, painted dark gray. Walls Furniture are off-white; ceilings are also of white plaster. was designed by the architect, makes use of metals and the Flush lights centilever principle; upholstery was dark blue. were devised of Model T headlights recessed in the stair rail; and indirect lighting was achieved along the north wall of living room by a stainless steel trough hung from the ceiling by stainless steel rods.

A 2-story garage structure to the south of the house has a finished apartment on the lower level below the car park.

Changes are few in the house since completion; the structure is unchanged, decoration follows the original plan, even much of the furniture is original. All repair work has be accomplished through the office of the architect. Higg inal intention in regard to the house is intact.

A monument of the early modern movement of architecture in California, a pristine example of the early International style. This is one of the ten most visited buildings in the Los Angeles area by architects, historians and students, and is an important part of our cultural heritage.

An early example of the adaptation of industrial materials and practices to domestic architecture: industrial steel sections, open web beams, prefabrication in factory of components which were then transported to the site for installation; Gunite shot from pneumatic hoses onto the expAnded steel frame to form the skin of the house; modular sash adapted from those used in factories. Such industrial materials and usages were employed to create an environment With: validity today.

The Lovell House is one of the most important landmarks of early modern architecture in California and the first internationally acclaimed design of Richard Neutra, one of the great pioneer architects of the 20th Century.
