Overlooking one of the lovely median parks running the length of Mulberry Street stands a very fine provincial adaptation of a house designed in the Greek revival manner. This "in-town", two-story, wood frame house built in the (1830-40 decade achieves an impressive dignity from an extremely pleasing proportion in elevation and great simplicity of detailing. The whole presents a chaste, understated appearance of great restraint.

The dominant architectural feature is a large prostyle wood floored portico with square two-story wooden columns, which is included under the main hip of the roof and extends the breadth of the front. Capped with a stepped cavetto coved molding (a carpenter adaptation of a classic Greek style), the columns terminate at the floor with a simple plank base. Flanked by sidelights with a full width glass transom overhead, a six-panel wooden door affords gracious entrance into the house. A shallow everdoor balcony supported at the sides by small round wood columns carries a very delicately scaled wrought iron balustrade. The interesting pattern of the ironwork, which relieves an otherwise austere front suggests a design akin to Spencerian script. with two planes of graceful curved rods punctuated by stamped metal rosettes. A similar balustrade with slightly attenuated scale also extends between the two-story columns of the main portico, returning at the ends to simple pilasters at the building wall. The smooth surface of wide ship-lap boards which form the surface of the building wall are an ideal background for silhouetting the delicate tracery of the balustrades.

Clapboard siding covers the remaining sides of the house and simple unmolded plank frames surround the six ever six double hung window sash. once separate one-story cottage to the rear, formerly the kitchen facility for the house, is now connected to the right rear side of the house.

In typical fashion a wide center hall extends through the house, front to rear, with a simple stairway having square balusters and newel posts, rising from the right rear side extending to an intermediate landing and turning 180° to the second floor. The stair ends are covered with a simple scroll design. The original house contained four large rectangular rooms upstairs and downstairs, with the frontmost downstairs rooms being parlors featuring double sliding flat panel doors (now fixed in place with a single opening cut into the center) that could be opened "ensuite" with the center hall. Two interior brick chimneys with fireplaces back to back serve the original rooms of the house. One of the original chimney pieces remains in the left front parlor. It is black and caramel veined Italian marble. interior of the house, like the exterior, is austere. The rooms are without The interior wall finish is plaster with the high ceiling first floor rooms having molded wood chair rails and wide baord pine floors. wood trim at the doors and windows is wide and molded in typical profiles of the perior. All the remaining original doors have six flat panels.

The house has undergone modifications over the years. Porches at the first and second floor levels have been added across the rear and subsequently enclosed as rooms. The upstairs has been subdivided into apartments and storage or work areas for the present tenant, who runs a formal wear rental business in the house. The general condition of the exterior is good and largely unchanged, and the interior at the main floor level has been redecorated. An original door with sidelights led to the balcony over the main front entrance. This has been removed and replaced by two double-hung windows.

George W. Price bought the house in 1863, and two years later it was bought by John Bennett Ross, owner of a cotton plantation outside the city and a successful businessman. Ross contributed time and effort to the Confederate cause; and, after the War was elected to the State Legislature in 1872 as a delegate from Bibb County.

In 1879 this Greek revival house was bought by John C. Curd(president, at the time, of the Exchange Bank) in whose family it remained the longest time. The Curd's daughter, May, married Richard Jordan who practiced law in Macon with Andrew Lane and who was, for a time, judge of the City Court of Macon. The Jordans lived in Mrs. Jordan's old home for many years before selling it to owners who turned in into an apartment house.

Owned now by J. Freeman Hart, Jr., who is interested in the preservation of old Macon homes, the handsome old place will continue to have apartments upstairs while a formal wear shop and wedding services center occupies the lower floor.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

This well-sited and imposing house is one of the remaining dwellings that make a significant contribution to the character of this street. Mulberry Street with its beautiful parks and complex of buildings having architectural and historical significance is certainly the most unique and interesting street in Macon's urban scene.

The six plain square columns match the pilasters on the corners of the house. Thr front wall is of abutted boards, the side walls, weather boarded and the pyramid roof covers the house and portico.

This typical ante-bellum house has a long history closely associated with prominent and influential people of Macon's earliest beginnings.

Three Solomon brothers, William, Henry and Peter, came to Macon in 1836 from old Marion in Twiggs County, Georgia. William, who built the house at 768 Mulberry Street in 1838, was one of early Macon's leading businessmen and a beloved member of the first Macon church, built in 1826, just across the street from this home.

just across the street from this home.

In 1844 Samuel R. Blake bought the house. Blake was a great orator and was called on to speak at many public meetings, including the great Harrison convention attended by thousands in Macon on August 13, 1840. Blake also was one of the first lawyers admitted to the bar of the newly organized Supreme Court of Georgia in 1846.

Zephariah Conner owned the house from 1851 to 1853. Conner served as colonel of the 12th Georgia Regiment in Virginia during the War Between the States; and, during the Florida War of 1836, he had been a lieutenant in the Macon Volunteers.

The next owner, James Alexander Nisbet, was a brother of Eagenius A. Nisbet, Congressman and author of Georgia's Ordinance of Secession. J. A. Nisbet studied law at Litchfield Law School in Connecticut, was admitted to the bar in 1833, and began the practice of law in Macon in partnership with Poe, and later with his brother. After the War Between the States he formed a partnership composed of Howell Cobb, Judge Jackson, E. A. and James A. Nisbet which was long known as among the ablest firms in the state. James A. Nisbet was mayorrof Macon in 1844-45 and later served in the State Legislature.

James Nisbet's son, James Cooper Nisbet, called the house on Mulberry Street home during his school years. During the War Between the States he formed a company in Dade County and took it to join the Georgia troops in Richmond, Virginia. He later wrote a book about his war experiences, "Four Years on the Firing Line," which has been edited by Bell Irvin Wiley and republished. After the War, Colonel Nisbet, following in his father's footsteps, served in the State Legislature.
