DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This building is unaltered and is very close to the original appearance other than some painting and patchwork done over the years. It is a two story red brick building with white wood trim. It has a white wooden porch with the original faded red brick. It has a gable roof with wood decking and hand-seamed metal roofing. It is an L-shaped house with American or common bond brick pattern. The windows are paired, set under a round head arch. The building is located among large oak trees facing a northern direction and the rear of the building overlooks the present Golf Course. The interior has plaster walls with 3 bedrooms upstairs and livingroom, dining room and kitchen downstairs (copy of floor plan attached). In 1950 a boiler room was added on the first floor with a bath upstairs. The foundation and walls are masonry with wood floor and roof framing. There is no basement. The attached floor plan indicates the humber of wood windows and doors. Photos of all four sides of the building are attached.

This building is the oldest structure still remaining in use at Fort McPherson. It was originally built as a civilian employee's quarters and was first occupied by the Civilian Post Engineer. It was occupied for approximately one year prior to 1923 by the chief clerk of the Southeastern Department who was an Army Field clerk. In 1923, the chief clerk vacated the quarters upon the death of his wife and the quarters were occupied by CWO Ulie H. Jeffers, then chief field clerk. CWO Jeffers occupied the quarters until late 1949 which was a period of approximately 27 years and probably establishes a record for continuous occupancy of Army quarters by one individual.

In 1953 it was converted to Noncommissioned Officer's Quarters and is presently occupied by the Forces Command Sergeant Major.

A history of Fort McPherson is attached.

HISTORICAL OVERVIEW

Fort McPherson, Georgia, a picturesque and historically significant army post, traces it's beginning to the Reconstruction Period after the War Between the States. In order to enforce Union regulations in the are the Third Military District was established in Atlanta in 1867 with a ten company garrison of infantry and calvary called McPherson Barracks.

McPherson Barracks was named in honor of General James Birdsey McPherson, U.S. Volunteers, who was killed during the War Between the States on July 22; 1864 during the Battle of Atlanta. General McPherson, who was the only Union general killed in action during the Civil War, graduated first in his class from West Point in 1853 and was the first to be retained as an instructor after graduation. General McPherson was also credited with being the first to use land mine warfare. During the period between 1867 and 1881 McPherson Barracks was garrisoned by the 2nd, 16th and 18th infantry regiments. In 1881 the Secretary of War removed the garrison from Atlanta, deactivated McPherson Barracks and the land was sold at public auction. A portion of the site was purchased by the American Baptist Home Mission Society for use as the Atlanta Baptist Female Seminary, which was to later become Spelman College, (part of the Atlanta University Center).

Even after the deactivation of McPherson Barracks, Atlanta continued to be a popular summer encampment area due to its temperate climate, especially with troops stationed in subtropical Florida areas. This popularity brought Congress to re-establish it as a permanent post on July 7, 1884. In 1885 Congress appropriated approximately $15,000 for the purchase of a site for a permanent post, with further purchases being made the following year. Work on the new post began in the summer of 1885 with most of the post's permanent buildings being constructed during the period of 1885 to 1889. The post was designated a permanent Army Post by General Order 44 and named Fort McPherson on May 4, 1889. It was originally garrisoned by the Fourth Artillery. The name Fort McPherson was suggested by Major General John A. Schofield, who was then Army Chief of Staff.

During the Spanish American War Fort McPherson served as a training base for the 29th U.S. Volunteers and was garrisoned at that time by the Fifth Infantry. After the Spanish American War activity at the post settied into a peacetime routine and dwindled to the point that during the period of 1914 through 1917 Fort McPherson was virtually in a caretaker status. With the entry of the United States into World War I in 1917, Fort McPherson became especially noted for its fine hospital, its officer training school, and also as a substantial interment camp which housed 1,411 German prisoners of war. Around the end of World War I on April 9, 1918, Camp Jesup Quarter Master Depot was established when the government purchased 136 acres directly south of Fort McPherson. Camp Jesup was a motor transport depot and two of its original buildings are still in use today; Building 363, which currently houses the Facilities Engineer warehouses and technical shops, has changed little in appearance and Building 210 - Patton Hall, which has been extensively renovated, now serves as the FORSCOM Command Headquarters. On August 23, 1927, Camp Jesup was discontinued and consolidated with Fort McPherson.

During the periods between 1920 to 1924 and 1927 to 1934 Fort McPherson was the headquarters for the 4th Corps which had formerly been known as the "Southeastern Department" of military responsibility. Following a major expansion of the post hospital in 1931, Fort McPherson became known primarily as a rehabilitation center for several years. During the late thirties a Citizen's Military Training Camp was initiated to teach a 30 day course in rifle practice, close order drill, and other military functions, etc. to Tocal civilian reservists.

The Selective Service Act of 1940 and the out-break of World War II caused a tremendous expansion of facilities and activity at Fort McPherson In 1941 the Atlanta National Guard Target Range, which was located adjacento Fort McPherson on the western side in the area which is now the golf course, was taken into the Fort McPherson Military Reservation. During the second World War Fort McPherson functioned as an induction, reception, and separation center operating on a 24 hour-a-day schedule. Again the hospital was expanded and the civilian employment population at the post increased rapidly. At the end of World War II the induction center became a separation center and nearly 200,000 servicemen were separated from activity at Fort McPherson.

After World War II, upon recommendations of an installation efficiency study by the Fourth Service Command Headquarters, the Headquarters, which had formerly occupied a portion of the old Post Office building and several leased buildings in downtown Atlanta, were moved to Fort McPherson on Decer 10, 1947. From that time forward through the Korean and Vietnamese conflic Fort McPherson's major function was administrative support of the 3rd Army Command Headquarters until its deactivitation on June 30, 1974. Fort McPherson's role as administrative and logistical support for a major U.S. Army headquarters command continues today since Headquarters United States Army Forces Command (FORSCOM) was established and headquartered at Fort McPherson on July 1, 1973. This new major command, whose primary mission is combat readiness, directs the readiness of all combat and supporting forces stationed in the United States and was formed with General Walter T. Kerwin Jr. assuming responsibilities as the first FORSCOM commander.

the establishment of the new FORSCOM Headquarters was accomplished by the Headquarters and Support Element, FORSCOM which was established in March 1973 with its main function being to support the change over of activities. Fort McPherson is now known as the "Home of the Combat Soldier" since it houses FORSCOM Headquarters, the center of FORSCOM's far reaching military responsibilities. In addition to FORSCOM, Fort McPherson also houses several smaller tenant activities ranging from a Regional Dental Activity to a Special Security Detachment.

As of July 1, 1974, Fort McPherson undertook the additional responsibility of administrative control of Fort Gillem Georgia (formerly the Atlanta Army Depot). The Atlanta Army Depot was renamed Fort Gillem in honor of Lt. General Alvan C. Gillem, former 3rd U.S. Army Commander who began and completed his forty year military career at Fort McPherson. Fort Gillem now serves as a sub-installation of Fort McPherson and studies are currently underway to determine the best functional use of the many facilities available at Fort Gillem.
