Charlton Hall Plantation House
 name of property
 Laurens County, South Carolina
 county and State

Charlton Hall Plantation House stands on South Carolina Highway 101 (formerly S.C. Secondary Road 30-54) approximately 2.5 miles south of the community of Hickory Tavern, in Laurens County.

This two-story brick residence is oriented in a westerly direction and contains a three bay facade. Its floor plan features four rooms on the first and second stories with wide central halls on each floor. The hip roof is covered with composition shingles. Two large interior brick chimneys, each with four fireplaces, provided the only original heat for the house. The facade and rear entrances feature simple one-story gable-roofed porches supported by corner columns. The bricks are laid in common or American bond.

The exterior dimensions of the house measure 57' x 41' on the north and south walls. The front porch measures 16'8" x 12'4", while the rear porch measures 15'6" x 12'4".

The interior dimensions of the first floor rooms measure 18'3" square, and the central hall measures 37'2" x 14'. Ceilings in the first floor rooms and central hall measure 12'6" high. The second floor rooms measure 18'5" square. The second floor central hall originally measured 38'2" x 13'9" before a modern bathroom reduced its length by 6'9". Ceilings in the second floor rooms and central hall measure 10'6" high.

Brick interior walls with fireplaces divide the adjoining rooms on either side of the central hall on the first and second floors. All eight fireplaces feature simple mantels and surrounds and several of them are flanked by original closets. Interior wall set-backs support the first floor joists; the joists are additionally braced by wood chocks used as needed to level them. The first floor joists abut the exterior walls and rest on set-backs and wood chocks affixed to the interior walls. Interior walls are faced with plaster, and floors are random board heart pine attached to the floor joists every 24" by square-headed machine-cut nails. Ceilings for several rooms in the house retain their original narrow-beaded planks. Picture moldings are embedded in the plaster walls at 3' to 4' below the ceilings in the first and second floor halls and the northeast and northwest first floor rooms, while a plain crown molding separates the ceilings and walls on both floors.

Most exterior and interior door and window trim consists of fluted jambs and lintels with bull's eye corner blocks. Matching solid wood four-panel double doors stand at each end of the first floor hall. Both entrance doors are surrounded by nine-light fixed sidelights over raised wood panels and multi-light transom and corner panels. All interior doors are solid-wood four-panel single doors. Single double-hung sash windows are centered in each exterior wall for the four first floor and four second floor rooms and in the second floor central hall over the front and rear entrances.

First floor windows contain twelve-over-eight lights, while second floor windows have eight-over-eight lights.

The main staircase, which has no landing, leads from the front of the first floor central hall to the second floor central hall and is tied into the wall separating the southwest and southeast second floor rooms. A large turned and fluted heart pine newel post braces the heart pine rail and square balusters. A secondary staircase, less elaborate than the main stair, leads directly from the southwest first floor room to the southeast second floor room and is tied into the opposite face of the wall that supports the main stair. Several inscriptions are pencilled on the dividing wall above the secondary stair, including these:

Commenced planting cotton seed April 30, 1900
Commenced planting cotton seed April 22, 1902
There was a severe hail storm here on June 2, 1904

Charlton Hall Plantation House was without electricity until ca. 1950 and without indoor plumbing--with the exception of a sink in the main house kitchen--until ca. 1970, when a sink and toilet were installed in the outside kitchen. Later alterations include a full bathroom added under the first floor main stair, and a second full bathroom added at the front end of the second floor central hall.

A one-story porch off the first floor at its northeast corner connects the house to an original one-story brick kitchen, which measures 17'4" x 23'8" along its north and south sides. Its hip roof is covered with standing seam metal. An exterior chimney is located on the east wall and a later stove flue is on the north wall. The bricks are laid in rows of seven bricks with a header course every eighth row. The interior walls of the kitchen are faced with original plaster except for part of the fireplace wall, which is faced with narrow beaded boards. Simple double-hung six-over-six windows with jack arches are centered in each exterior wall; the interior window trim is plain molding with no corner blocks. This kitchen contributes to the historic character of the property.

Three early-twentieth century outbuildings to the rear of the main house--a shed commonly called "the blacksmith shop" measuring 12'4" x 16'4", a frame smokehouse measuring 10' x 12', and a frame shed measuring 15' x 18'--also contribute to the historic character of the property.

In 1917 a 108-acre tract including the Charlton Hall Plantation House passed from the hands of the family. Subsequent transactions have further reduced the parcel on which the house is situated to its present (1995) size of 3.5 acres.

Section 8 Page 8

Charlton Hall Plantation House
name of property
Laurens County, South Carolina
county and State

Charlton Hall Plantation House is significant as an intact and relatively uncommon example of mid-nineteenth century brick construction in the rural South Carolina upcountry, and for its association with George Washington Sullivan, Sr., (1809-1887), a prominent farmer and public servant of Laurens District before, during, and after the Civil War.

The South Carolina upcountry was largely overshadowed by the lowcountry until after the American Revolution, not only in number of inhabitants settling there, but also in its development, such as the identification and production of a primary crop on which a strong economic base could be built. This gap began to close, however, after 1820, when the production of upland cotton became profitable. Cotton soon became the mainstay of the upcountry, spurring rapid growth in the population, economy, and society of the region. Brick construction in the upcountry prior to the development of upland cotton and the subsequent expansion it encouraged was limited primarily to buildings for public use such as courthouses or churches or commercial use such as stores and taverns. Few brick residences were built in the South Carolina upcountry before ca. 1840, and even after that date relatively few brick residences--particularly those with brick interior walls as well as exterior ones--were built in Laurens or other upcountry South Carolina districts before the Civil War.¹

Sullivan built this house ca. 1847 on part of his extensive land holdings in Laurens District (now Laurens County). He owned 66 slaves in 1860, and Charlton Hall boasted a cash value of $33,000 that year with 2200 acres of improved land. The farm produced 40 four hundred-pound bales of ginned cotton as well as four thousand bushels of Indian corn, seven hundred bushels of oats, six hundred bushels of wheat, two hundred bushels of peas and beans, and smaller amounts of sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, and rye. It also produced butter, wool, and wine, and its livestock included twenty milk cows, sixty other cattle, sixty sheep, thirty pigs, three horses, and fifteen mules. Sullivan was the principal owner of G.W. Sullivan and Company, which operated a lime kiln, and an officer in the Fork Shoals Cotton Mill, in nearby southwestern Greenville County, which had been founded by his father Hewlett Sullivan (1763-1830). George Washington Sullivan also represented Laurens County in the South Carolina House of Representatives during the Civil War from 1862 to 1864, and was a Laurens County Commissioner during Reconstruction from 1868 to 1870.²
