SUMMARY

The Thomas E. Hess House is an excellent example of an I-House; two-story, single-pile structure with two rooms on each floor and a central hall. A one-story rear ell contains the dining room and kitchen. The frame house has a cedar-shingled gable roof and native sandstone foundation. The two-story, centered front porch with hip roof features jigsaw wooden lace ornamentation and balusters of native walnut. The L-shaped back porch has been enclosed. The foundation, which originally consisted of piers, is now continuous. Behind the house are ten outbuildings typical of the types of structures necessary to a small working farm. These include two storage sheds, two barns, a corncrib, two chicken coops, a garage, a pumphouse, and a storm cellar. A large garden is situated beside the house, but the land behind the outbuildings has grown up in woods.

ELABORATION

The Hess House faces State Highway 14, which serves as Marcella's main street. The front yard is delineated by a decorative woven-wire fence. A concrete sidewalk leads up to the house, and the name "T.E. Hess" is spelled out in block letters in the first square inside the gate. The house is relatively plain in appearance with corner boards capped with molding, simple decorative moldings above the two over two windows, and a transom above the front door with its applied wreath on the lower panel are the only decorations besides a rather restrained jigsaw work and turned balusters on the front porch. The interior is similarly simple. The hall and stairwell have wainscoting of beaded boards, which also make up the ceiling. The staircase has an attractive free-standing walnut newel post, balusters identical to those on the porch, and scalloped strings.

The front parlor which is to the left of the entrance features the house's only mantel, a simple composition of pine boards with minimal millwork. The original sandstone fireplace front was lightly worked by a stonemason using a toothed chisel to produce a grooved band at the edge of the opening. Recently a wood stove fireplace insert has been installed here. This room has been panelled and the ceiling lowered. The woodwork has been painted. The bedroom across the hall retains the original woodgraining.

The dining room, immediately behind the parlor, has beaded board wainscoting and originally had walls of horizontally-applied beaded boards. These have been covered with panelling. The ceiling has been sheetrocked.

The kitchen is behind the dining room and has been similarly panelled. Also, a door which once opened into the side yard has been closed. A double window above a kitchen sink has been installed in approximately the same space.

The L-shaped back porch has been enclosed. First, the part behind the bedroom was enclosed to provide a bathroom and a room for the safe where Mr. Hess kept the money and the accounts for his store and his farm. This room now houses a second bathroom. The remainder of the porch was enclosed more recently with horizontal boards and windows.

The two upstairs bedrooms have horizontal board walls which were canvassed and papered. Floors are painted; ceilings of beaded boards were papered. The original woodgraining is extant on all doors, window and door frames, and baseboards. Attic space is located above the rear ell and above the main pile.

In addition to the parlor fireplace, wood stoves were used to heat the house.

Immediately behind the house are a stone and concrete storm cellar, a frame pump house, a storage shed which is half box construction and half frame with stone veneer, and a large box smokehouse with storage. Behind these buildings are the remains of the fence which once separated the yard from the animal lots. Located behind this fence are a frame garage, a chicken coop, a transverse crib barn, a log corncrib, another barn, and an abandoned chicken coop.

The transverse crib barn has an open central aisle with four stalls to the right and a small granary and larger corncrib to the left. This central portion has hewn log sills. A shed on the left appears to be an animal shelter while a smaller shed on the right was apparently for equipment storage. Floored areas above the stalls and cribs held loose hay. The corncrib, now in deteriorated condition, has hewn log walls joined with square notching. The traditional door is composed of vertical boards joined with two chamfered horizontal boards. About fifteen feet square, the building was originally located on a neighboring farm, where it served as the first school building in the area. The Hess children went to school there, and Thomas E. Hess purchased it about 1905 and moved it to its present location for use as a corncrib.

This second barn follows no traditional pattern but contains two cribs, probably for feed storage; three stalls, and a floored area under the roof for hay storage.

The buildings are representative of a collection of the various types needed in the early twentieth century to support a small farm. They illustrate the major building techniques employed in the area in the time period--balloon frame, box and log.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

SUMMARY

Thomas E. Hess was the grandson of William Hess, the first white man to settle on the west bank of the White River in present-day Stone County after the departure of the Cherokees in 1828. The Hess family remained the dominant farmers and merchants in the area for three generations, each generation moving a little farther inland. The Thomas E. Hess House has dominated the hamlet of Marcella since its construction in 1900. Other structures on the 6.4 acre plot include a stone cellar, a washhouse and well, a smokehouse, a barn, and a log corncrib. The log corncrib was once a schoolhouse which originally stood on the old Evetts Place on Wallace Creek. It was the first school building in the neighborhood. Abandoned, it was purchased about 1905 by T.E. Hess and moved to its present location. The farmstead is significant both because of its association with the influential pioneer Hess family and because of the collection of buildings still on the site.

ELABORATION

William Hess settled on the west bank of the White River in 1828 on land only recently vacated by the Cherokees. He built a log house and store near the ferry landing serving the area's main road to the west. His son, Thomas M. Hess, continued his father's enterprises, transforming the old log house into a general store and moving into a new log house on the ridge above the river before the Civil War. As other families moved in, the settlement on the river became known as Hesstown. Hess's farms prospered too, and in 1869 he and his brother built frame homes a little further up the road. Nearby Hess built a new store and a distillery, becoming increasingly involved in the growing riverboat trade on the White River.

By the time Hess's children were grown, he was prosperous enough to give each one some land and to build each a house. These formed the nucleus of the little village which he named Marcella. In 1899, his only son, Thomas E. Hess, married Nellie Knight, and in 1900 Thomas M. Hess gave them a house on 6.4 acres of land; the largest house in Marcella.

Except for four years spent in Batesville so that his children could attend school, Thomas E. Hess (known as Turk) spent his entire life within a quarter mile of the house where he was born, most of those years in the house his father gave him. Turk Hess died in 1973 at the age of 100. His house and the associated outbuildings remain as they have always been and the farmstead remains in the Hess family.

Re: Thomas E. Hess House
Marcella
Stone County

Dear Carol:

We are enclosing for your review the nomination for the Thomas E. Hess House in Stone County. The Arkansas Historic Preservation Program has complied with all applicable nominating procedures and notification requirements in the nomination process.

We are respectfully asking that the 45-day commenting period be waived on the Hess House and that it be listed as soon as possible. The family wishes to donate an historic facade easement during the current year. The Arkansas Historic Preservation Program will begin the administration of the easement program this month and we wish to have this building as one of the first on which we accept an easement. Your assistance in this matter is greatly appreciated. Some action is necessary by the end of this month.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter.

Sincerely,

Wilson Stiles
