Describe present and historic physical appearance.

The Geneva United States Post Office is located at the southeast corner of 9th and H Streets, one block north of the central business district of Geneva, the Fillmore County seat, in southeastern Nebraska (1990 population: 2,310). The one-story five-bay Georgian Revival style building, constructed in 1939-40, is an excellent, well-preserved example of a Class C or D small post office built from standardized plans developed in the 1930's. The nomination also includes three contributing objects: two ornamental lamp posts located on either side of the main entry, and a flag pole.

The post office building, symmetrical in design, measures approximately 63 by 60 feet and features a ridge hipped roof with a central wooden cupola, complete with weather vane. The roof retains its original copper tiles with snow guards; the rear flat portion of the roof is composition The raised central entry features a brick segmental arch, fluted tile. Doric columns, entablature, and transom window. An elliptical pediment above the entrance features a stylized aluminum eagle. Two pairs of 12over-12 paned double sash windows with limestone lintels flank the main entrance; similar fenestration is employed on the north and south facades. Limestone was also used in the building's beltcourse and watertable. the east (front) and south facades, below grade area ways with granite steps and iron railings provided light and ventilation to the lower level. The building exhibits good integrity; modifications include replacement of the front entry doors and minor interior alterations. Constructed from standardized plans developed in the 1930's, the building is similar to the Auburn Post Office (NH01-56). Construction began in October 1939; the building was officially dedicated on August 28, 1940 (The Nebraska Signal, Aug. 22, 29, 1940).

A mural entitled "Building a Sod House," by Edward Chávez, is located on the south lobby wall above the postmaster's door which is flanked by wood framed, glass enclosed bulletin boards. The mural, which measures 13 feet 8 inches by 5 feet 8 inches, occupies the typical space for murals commissioned by the Treasury Department's Section of Fine Arts program in a small Class C or D post office. The mural frames the postmaster's door which extends approximately 8 inches above the top of the bulletin boards. The irregular shape of the mural space caused by projecting doorways and bulletin boards is typical of the physical building features that Section artists had to take into consideration. The Geneva commission was awarded to Colorado Springs artist Edward Chávez in January, 1941, and the completed mural was installed by the artist in September of the same year (The Nebraska Signal, Sept. 18, 1941).

Painted in green, brown, and blue tones, offset by shades of sepia and white, the mural depicts settlers in the process of building a sod house. In the immediate foreground, two men prepare to raise the building's ridgepole which is a tree trunk shorn of branches. The ridgepole extends across the mural. In the right foreground, a man in a white shirt and suspenders prepares to lift the pole onto the t-shaped crook of a tree trunk; at his feet is a grasshopper plow, a type used by Great Plains settlers to cut sod. In the left foreground a man bends to lift the other end of the ridgepole and a woman in a long dress stands behind him with her arms around a little girl. In the background another figure holds the reins of three horses pulling a load of sod on a wooden sled; the reins Immediately behind the figures is a half-raised extend across the scene. sod wall with a completed door frame made of branches. The treeless expanse beyond the half-finished soddy are further defined by the outline of the doorway, which frames the view and reinforces the mural's historic theme of Great Plains settlement.

The lobby interior is in excellent condition and retains its original terrazzo tile floor, marble wainscotting, and woodwork. Sometime after the mural was installed, the original light fixtures were replaced. Currently, the lobby has enclosed, fluorescent lights flush to the ceiling which do not obstruct the mural. A varnished wooden vestibule projects into the lobby; it is an original design feature typical of small Class C or D post offices built from standardized plans developed in the 1930's. In 1981 the mural was cleaned and restored by an art conservator under contract with the United States Postal Service; it is in excellent condition.

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

The Geneva United States Post Office is being nominated to the National Register as part of the Nebraska Post Offices Which Contain Section Artwork (1938-1942) multiple property nomination at the state level of significance under Criterion A for its association with the United States Treasury Department's Section of Fine Arts program (1934-1943) and under Criterion C for the artistic significance of the mural it contains. The Geneva post office mural entitled, "Building a Sod House," was painted by Colorado Springs artist Edward Chávez and installed in September, 1941.

The oil-on-canvas mural, which measures 13 feet 8 inches by 5 feet 8 inches, is located on the south lobby wall directly above the postmaster's door in the typical location for murals installed in Class C or D post offices such as Geneva. The mural is an excellent example of artwork commissioned for post offices through the Treasury Department's Section of Fine Arts from 1934-1943. Painted in green, brown, and blue tones, the mural depicts a group of settlers in the process of constructing a sod house. The mural's historical theme associated with settlement of the Great Plains, executed in a realistic style, make it an excellent example of government-sponsored Regionalism.

In January, 1941, Colorado Springs artist Edward Chávez received a notice from the Section inviting him to submit designs for the Geneva, Nebraska, post office mural. Chávez was selected for the commission on the basis of designs he submitted for a Social Security Building mural competition. The letter cited the amount of the commission, $750, and the payment schedule. Chávez would receive approximately one-third after preliminary sketches had been approved; one-third after a full-size cartoon was approved; and the remainder after the mural was installed and photographed. The letter also informed the artist that the mural would have to be completed within eight months. Chávez immediately accepted the commission and informed Assistant Section Chief Rowan that he would visit Geneva to develop preliminary sketches.

In January or February, 1941, Chávez visited Geneva to develop sketches which were submitted for Section approval in March, 1941. Chávez proposed two designs: a "typical" Nebraska farm scene with cows grazing near a haystack; and "early pioneer homesteaders building a sod house." The later subject he said, had been selected because of its historical significance to the state: "the sod house typifies the early settler on the Nebraska prairie." Section officials chose the sod house design and were apparently especially pleased with its quality. Rowan praised the composition of the design and added: "I personally thought you should be congratulated on your achievement."

When Chávez submitted the color sketch a few months later, his work was again approved but Rowan suggested that the left foreground figure be "restudied" to correct arm-torso proportions. The problem was corrected and the required photograph of a full-size cartoon was submitted in July, 1941. A month later the Geneva mural received final approval from the Section and was installed by the artist in September, 1941 (The Nebraska Signal, Sept. 18, 1941). A Geneva post office employee informed Rowan that he had heard many favorable comments from the public who considered it a "fine addition to the decorations of the building."

Chávez, along with twin sisters Jenne and Ethel Magafan, studied at the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center under Frank Mechau and Boardman Robinson. Ethel and Jenne Magafan and Mechau also painted Section murals for Nebraska post offices: Albion, Auburn, and Ogallala. From 1935-1937, prior to the Geneva commission, Chávez assisted Mechau with Public Works of Art Project (PWAP) murals. In addition to the Geneva, Nebraska mural Chávez received Section commissions for post offices in Colorado and Texas.

A nationally prominent artist, Edward (Eduardo) Chávez has been described as one of the "truly outstanding" 20th century Mexican-American artists (Quirarte, 1973). The paintings, graphics, and sculptures produced during his long career have been exhibited throughout the United States and in Brazil and Italy. His works are in major museum collections including the Library of Congress, the Museum of Modern Art and the National Academy of Design. Chávez has also taught or served as artist in residence at such institutions as Colorado College, Syracuse University, and the Art Students League of New York. Currently he lives in Woodstock, New York; he reported that his experience with the post office mural projects of the 1930's and 1940's was a rewarding and interesting aspect of his career.
