Julien Inscription Panel (Exploration and the Fur Trade Theme)

The inscription panel is located on a rock fin that forms a barrier in a natural campsite area near a prominent landmark known as the Dark Angel. The panel itself is approximately nine feet wide by six feet tall. The inscription is incised into the stone. Sheep herders and/or cowboys also left inscriptions on the panel, however, those are not considered to be intrusions as they do not cover the Julien inscription and those as well as some prehistoric petroglyphs indicate that the area was a popular stopping place during the years before the land was incorporated into Arches National Monument(now Park).

Function or Use:

Historic: domestic/campsite
Present: vacant/not in use

Geographical Data:

Acreage: less than one

UTM Reference: 12 6 17 200 42 97 800

Verbal Boundary Description:

The Julien Inscription site is bounded on east by the rock fin the inscription is on, on the south by a line from the southern end of the fin to a parallel, but partially buried fin west of the inscription panel, by that fin on the west, and by a line from that fin back to the inscription fin on the north, twenty feet north of the north end of the inscriptions.

Boundary Justification:

The boundaries, as described, not only include the resource, but also the area that is the natural campsite there (see description section). This was done to preserve the historic setting as well as the resource so the feeling and association of the resource with the camp remains complete.
