DESCRIPTION SUMMARY

The Buckeystown Historic District consists of most of the unincorporated cross-roads village of Buckeystown which is located in southern Frederick County about four miles south of the City of Frederick. The district includes approximately 75 buildings of which the majority are houses dating from the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The houses are primarily of brick or frame construction and public and commercial buildings of brick or stone. Specifically, the influences of Queen Anne and Victorian styles predominate. The buildings are arranged along a gently winding and undulating road with most structures sitting near the roadway and surrounded by large deciduous trees. The residential structures of three adjoining farms are included as a historical and architectural continuum of the village. Non-contributing structures are two twentieth century masonry gas stations, one of which now serves as a fire station.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION

Buckeystown is situated in the valley of the Rocky Mountain Run, a tributary of the Monocacy River, in southern Frederick County, Maryland, four miles south of the City of Frederick. Surrounded by prosperous farms, its relative density, stylistic variety, and residential character present a vivid contrast to its rural context. Houses and commercial buildings are arrayed along two major streets, forming a cross-roads at the center of town, Maryland Routes 85 and 80 (Manor Woods Road).

The substantial frame Queen Anne and Victorian houses provide the town with its predominant visual image, that of a prosperous late 19th century residential settlement. Sited upon large lots on the gently rolling land to the north and south of the stream bed, the characteristic irregular massing and carpentered details of these houses evoke the most active period of Buckeystown's growth. The collection of cupolas, shingles, elaborate entrances, carriage houses, dormers and wood or iron picket fences provide a depth of texture. Churches, earlier (Federal period) houses, and commercial buildings contribute to the variety of the town.

The collection of late 19th century houses includes several outstanding examples of their kind. The frame John Baker house (#35) of 1896 has wide porches and a corner turret of three stories with a bell-cast roof; the entrance is recessed behind an elliptical-arched opening with a stylized "arcade" on a podium. The Kerwin Semon house of about 1895 (#45) is more diminutive, and imposes a gothic character on a common Maryland rural house-type: a two-story, three-bay, gable-roofed house with central gable dormer containing a round or pointed arch window. To this has been added a polygonal turret and a porch with elaborate brackets and a modillion cornice with three rows of dentils. The same general form is found in the Daniel Baker, Jr., house (#20) of 1899, with less intricate modifications, and is expanded upon in the Keller house (#32) 1895, the William Botelers house (#30) 1908, the Charles Huseman house (#34) 1895, and (in brick, this time), the Emily Driscoll house (#27) 1900. A variety of sidings, porches, bargeboards, windows, and cornices distinguish these houses from one another, while they share a common ancestry.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION (Continued)

At the crossroads are the town's oldest buildings, including two brick commercial structures which distinguish the center of town. McKinna's store (#41) of 1890 was once a three-story structure, altered after a fire. A patterned slate-shingle roof, a second story with a row of five round-arched windows with six-pane upper sash, a deep first story roof overhang on brackets, and plate glass shop-windows with multiple paned transoms are the salient characteristics of this structure. The William Baker Office (#15) 1896, is a one-story structure with a hipped roof and a central chimney with arched panels. Its windows are 1/1 with transoms, set in segmental-arched openings, paired on the main facade. Two gable dormers are set into the forward corners of the roof, eyelid dormers on the side slopes, and a larger gable dormer at the rear. Also located at the crossroads is Delashmutt's Store (#16). This one-story structure with hipped roof was converted from an 1815 structure into a gas station in the 1930s.

Near the center of town is another older structure, the Sarah Duvall house (#17), of about 1815. It is a stone Federal-style house of three bays and two stories on the facade, with end chimneys and a rear ell. The Philip Sinstock house (#9) of 1785 is another Federal house, this time in brick. It is five bays wide and two stories high with a gable roof, end chimneys, and 9/9 windows under flat arches. The house has a very fine transom-and-sidelight entrance. Nearby is the tavern of John Buckey, for whom the town was named (#13, circa 1780): a two-story, four bay stone house with Victorian porch.

Worker housing is located east of town along Buckingham Lane and Michael's Mill Road (Old Route 80). This worker housing primarily accommodated the Thomas Brickyard and Buckeystown Cannery workers as well as domestics. The settlement along Michael's Mill Road is and always has been predominantly black and includes the R. S. Weedon House, a one and one-half story log residence covered with German siding, built by 1858; the W. C. Mead House, a two and one-half story frame house with one story log addition is located on the Bond Map of 1858 and was the home of a local physician, Dr. Walter Mead; the Buckeystown Methodist Church, a one story frame Carpenter Gothic building with two story belfry decorated by fishscale shingling railing and finial; the church parsonage, a two and one-half story frame Carpenter Gothic house with scroll and spindle front porch, and the Nina Brown House built between 1900-1910 by John Brown, husband of the current resident who worked for many families in town as a domestic.

The worker housing along Buckingham Lane consists of three main styles. Two story front gable Carpenter Gothic residences built by Newton Schaefer, a local carpenter, between 1900-1910 are located along the southeast side of the lane. Located on the north side of the lane are more substantial two story brick flank gable roof residences built by Nelson Ponton, a local plasterer, from local Buckeystown brick. The remainder of the buildings are simple two story flank gable frame residences two bays wide which have been covered by asbestos or aluminum siding.

The principal residential structures of three adjoining farms are included as a historical and architectural continuum of the village. The houses, number 1, 26, and 53 in the catalogue, are set back from the road further than most of the buildings in the district but not as far back as commonly found in farm complexes. Although the set-back is deeper, the buildings and their setting have the physical feeling of being a part of the village because of the architectural character and the landscaping are similar to those of the main section of the village.

Non-residential architecture also includes the remains of the Thomas brickyards (#43), 1905. The complex, one of the major industries of the town supplying brick to much of Frederick County, is located on the east side of Route 85, just north of the stream. Several small frame residences located on Buckingham Lane were built as workers' houses for the brickyards. Ruins of a cannery, another significant industry, can still be seen west on Manor Woods Road.

A catalogue of the most significant structures in Buckeystown is as follows:

1. Augustus Nicodemus house - Two-story, whitewashed brick; five bays wide, vernacular nineteenth century; small bank barn.
2. Robert Grady house - Two-story, frame with center gable; fishscale shingling.
3. Charles Harris house - Twentieth century one-story brick; bungalow style.
4. Buckeystown School - Built 1868 - One-story, common bond brick, tower removed, converted into apartments in late 1950s.
5. Cloyd Fox house - One-story, frame; twentieth century.
6. W. Leroy Poole house - Twentieth century, two-story, frame covered with false brick asbestos siding, mansard roof.
7. Mehrl Adams house - Nineteenth century vernacular, two-story, frame with aluminum siding; bay window; south end with fishscale shinglework.
8. Cyrus Poole house - Built 1859, two-story, stuccoed, large pedimented entrance porch with decorative railing, bargeboard and finial, Palladian-style windows, central gable.
9. Philip Sinstock house - Circa 1785, two-story, Federal style, five bays wide, Flemish and common bond; stepped brick cornice; one-story brick outbuildings to the north side.

SIGNIFICANCE SUMMARY

Applicable Criteria: A,C

Buckeystown has made a significant contribution to the historical, industrial, and architectural development and fabric of Frederick County. The town primarily embodies the distinctive characteristics of a late nineteenth century community highlighted by many of Frederick County's finest examples of Carpenter Gothic and Colonial Revival styles with a few earlier stone and brick residences which symbolize the initial eighteenth century development of the area. Beginning in the late eighteenth century and spanning the nineteenth century, Buckeystown grew as a center of industrial activity in Frederick County with a tannery, mills, and the close proximity to the agricultural production of Carrollton Manor and developing primarily through the efforts of the Baker family into a center for brick manufacturing and canning activity. However the predominant character of the town is no longer industrial but quiet residential with little if any changes from the period of 1870-1910 when it grew to its present size by the construction of outstanding private residences, churches and worker housing for cannery and brickyard workers, domestics, executives of the Baker business and retired farmers.

HISTORY AND SUPPORT

Buckeystown contains a fine collection of late 19th and early 20th century buildings. Throughout its history the town has thrived both commercially and industrially, and the construction of residences followed the fortunes of these economic endeavors. Three substantial buildings remain from 18th century connection with Carrollton Manor. About fifteen buildings from the early to mid-19th century are simple, plain structures. About thirty, built during the 1870-1910 boom period, are Queen Anne or Carpenter Gothic stylish structures. Buckeystown has remained, in appearance, a late 19th plus turn of the century town. The main part of the town was originally part of a tract of 400 acres called Good Luck that was surveyed for Meredith Davis, a Quaker from Prince George's County in 1731.<sup>1</sup> In 1751 John Darnall purchased a portion of Good Luck from Mr. Davis that totaled 160 acres and was "on the west side of the Great Road" (Buckeystown Pike).<sup>2</sup> The town's west and south boundaries were Carrollton Manor, the estate of Charles Carroll, a Maryland signer of the Declaration of Independence. In later years, the south end of town came to include part of Lot 5 of the Manor.

Certain geographical assets and historical events led to the growth of the village. The main road which stretched from Pennsylvania to Florida which began as an Indian trail, brought commerce through the area.<sup>3</sup> The springs, used by the Indians and early settlers, even today supply many of the homes on the north end of town with their total water needs. The establishment of Carrollton Manor in the mid-eighteenth century greatly influenced the development of Buckeystown. The manor hummed with industry: mills, operated by the water power of the Monocacy River, ground the grain which substituted for tobacco in Charles Carroll's agricultural plan for the estate.

Kilns were established to burn the lime used to fertilize the fields. Taverns sprang up, stores were built, and harnessmakers, wheelwrights, coopers, shoemakers, tailors, and shingle makers worked at their trades.

The first noteworthy family, the Buckeys, did not arrive in the village until 1775. For the next 200 years, the town grew and prospered through the efforts of many industrious families. By 1795 John Buckey had built a stone tavern described in 1811 as "a large and commodious house with a kitchen and smokehouse attached to it with blacksmith and wheelwright shop".<sup>4</sup> His brother, George, built a tannery across the road during the same period. East of town along the Monocacy River, Meredith Davis established a flour mill as early as 1766. West of town, the Monocacy Quaker Meeting house was located on five acres of land Meredith Davis conveyed to members of the Monocacy Meeting on April 27, 1739.<sup>5</sup> At the intersection of Manor Woods Road and the Great Road (Route 85), three iron-rich stone buildings were erected around 1790, one a residence, another a general store and post office, and the other a residence and store. In 1880 two brick Queen Anne buildings were built by the Baker family, one as an office and the other a well-stocked store and post office. The Baker interests also began a cannery in the 1890s and gave the land for the use of the Thomas brickyard, whose kilns still stand. In the nineteenth century, the Bakers became the major entrepreneurs in town, beginning with Daniel Baker who purchased the tannery from George Buckley in 1832 and whose family interests eventually lead to the formation of the Buckingham Industrial School for Boys (1898) south of the town, and the Citizens National Bank in Frederick. William Baker and Charles Thomas made a small fortune in the 1890s by selling half-acre plots in town and building large frame residences. The majority of structures in the town today date from this period. A creamery was established around 1890 by the Nicodemus family, which moved to Frederick in 1929 much to the pleasure of the town residents who claimed the ice cream to be the best in the world!

Buckeystown, although now a residential community, was dominated by industrial activity for much of its early history. It now has a meat market, a carry-out food store, an antique shop, a pottery shop, gas station, and a furniture reupholstery business.

The earliest church in town was the Monocacy Quaker Meeting house, which stopped holding services in the 1760s. The next church was a large, stone Methodist Episcopal Church built in 1827 and torn down in 1905. The stone was used for the foundations of the brickyard company houses on Buckingham Lane. The present Methodist Protestant Church is the second on the site, and was rebuilt in 1896. A small brick Reformed Church, a residence since 1946, was built in 1883 on the north end of town. Through its long history, the town has had three different school sites. The first was located near the Quaker Meeting house property, at the Rocky Fountain Spring; the next along the road to the Davis Mill; and the last red brick school, built from pattern books and in use until the 1950s, in 1868; the later still stands.

 Frederick County, Maryland

The most important years in the growth of Buckeystown were between 1870 and 1910, when the crossroads were a bustle of commercial activity, and the Queen Anne and Carpenter Gothic style Victorian homes were being built by the prosperous merchants of the town. A small black settlement, which included a church, (still active today) and school, was located on the east side of town and was occupied by servants of the wealthy families and cannery and brickyard workers. Today, there is evidence of the pride that the present owners have in their historic town by the well cared for homes and lawns throughout and by the local support for this nomination.

VERBAL BOUNDARY DESCRIPTION

The boundaries of the Buckeystown Historic District consist of the boundary lines as recorded in the Frederick County Land Records for those properties in Buckeystown as illustrated on the enclosed map, labeled "boundary illustration", which is based upon Frederick County Tax Map number 95, except for the border in the northwest corner of the district which is formed by the southern edge of a lane projecting east from Maryland Route 85 and the 280' elevation line as indicated on the Buckeystown, Maryland, USGS map which marks a drop in the topography behind the historic resource in this section of the district.

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION

The Buckeystown Historic District includes most of the unincorporated cross-roads village known as Buckeystown where the majority of the buildings sit on small rectangular lots bordered by broad farm fields. The boundaries of the district consist primarily of property lines which in several places are visually delineated by change in landscape from lawn to field. The boundaries were drawn to include the concentration of historic resources and exclude non-contributing properties where possible such as the new commercial and residential areas along Manor Woods Road. The boundary in the northeast corner consists of a geographical feature, a drop in the terrain, which also is visually delineated.

The three farms adjoining the town on the northeast, northwest and southwest have been included in the boundaries of the historic district because of their historical connections with the town. The farms bridge the transition from a community environment to open farmland and are an integral part of the district for their historical connections with the town.

Mount Hope (#53), circa 1800, a fine Federal style two and one-half story gable roofed brick residence laid in Flemish bond with a molded brick water table and twin belt course is comparative in styling and detail to the Philip Sinstock house (#9) in town. It is surrounded by a small two story log tenant house covered with German siding, a frame wagon shed, nineteenth century bank barn and round board and batten chickenhouse of typical regional style with octagonal roof. Mount Hope was built circa 1785 by Meredith Davis who first obtained the land grant Good Luck on which the eastern half of the town was laid out on March 27, 1731. He established the Monocacy Mills located on Old Route 80 just east of the town and his son, Ignatius, was instrumental in the construction of the stone Methodist Episcopal Church in Buckeystown, built in 1827 and demolished in 1905.

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION (Continued)

Located across the road is the Augustus Nicodemus house (#1). Built in 1874, it is a two story vernacular whitewashed brick house of typical regional style built before most of the houses in town with a small vertical plank bank barn. Augustus Nicodemus, one of the prominent businessmen of the town, was the founder of the Nicodemus Creamery and Ice Cream Plant which manufactured ice cream, milk, cream and ice. The plant which was located on the west side of Route 85 just north of Manor Woods Road was established in 1887 in Buckeystown and operated until 1921 when it was moved to Frederick. Nicodemus also served as general manager of the Buckeystown Packing and Canning Company once located north of Manor Woods Road.

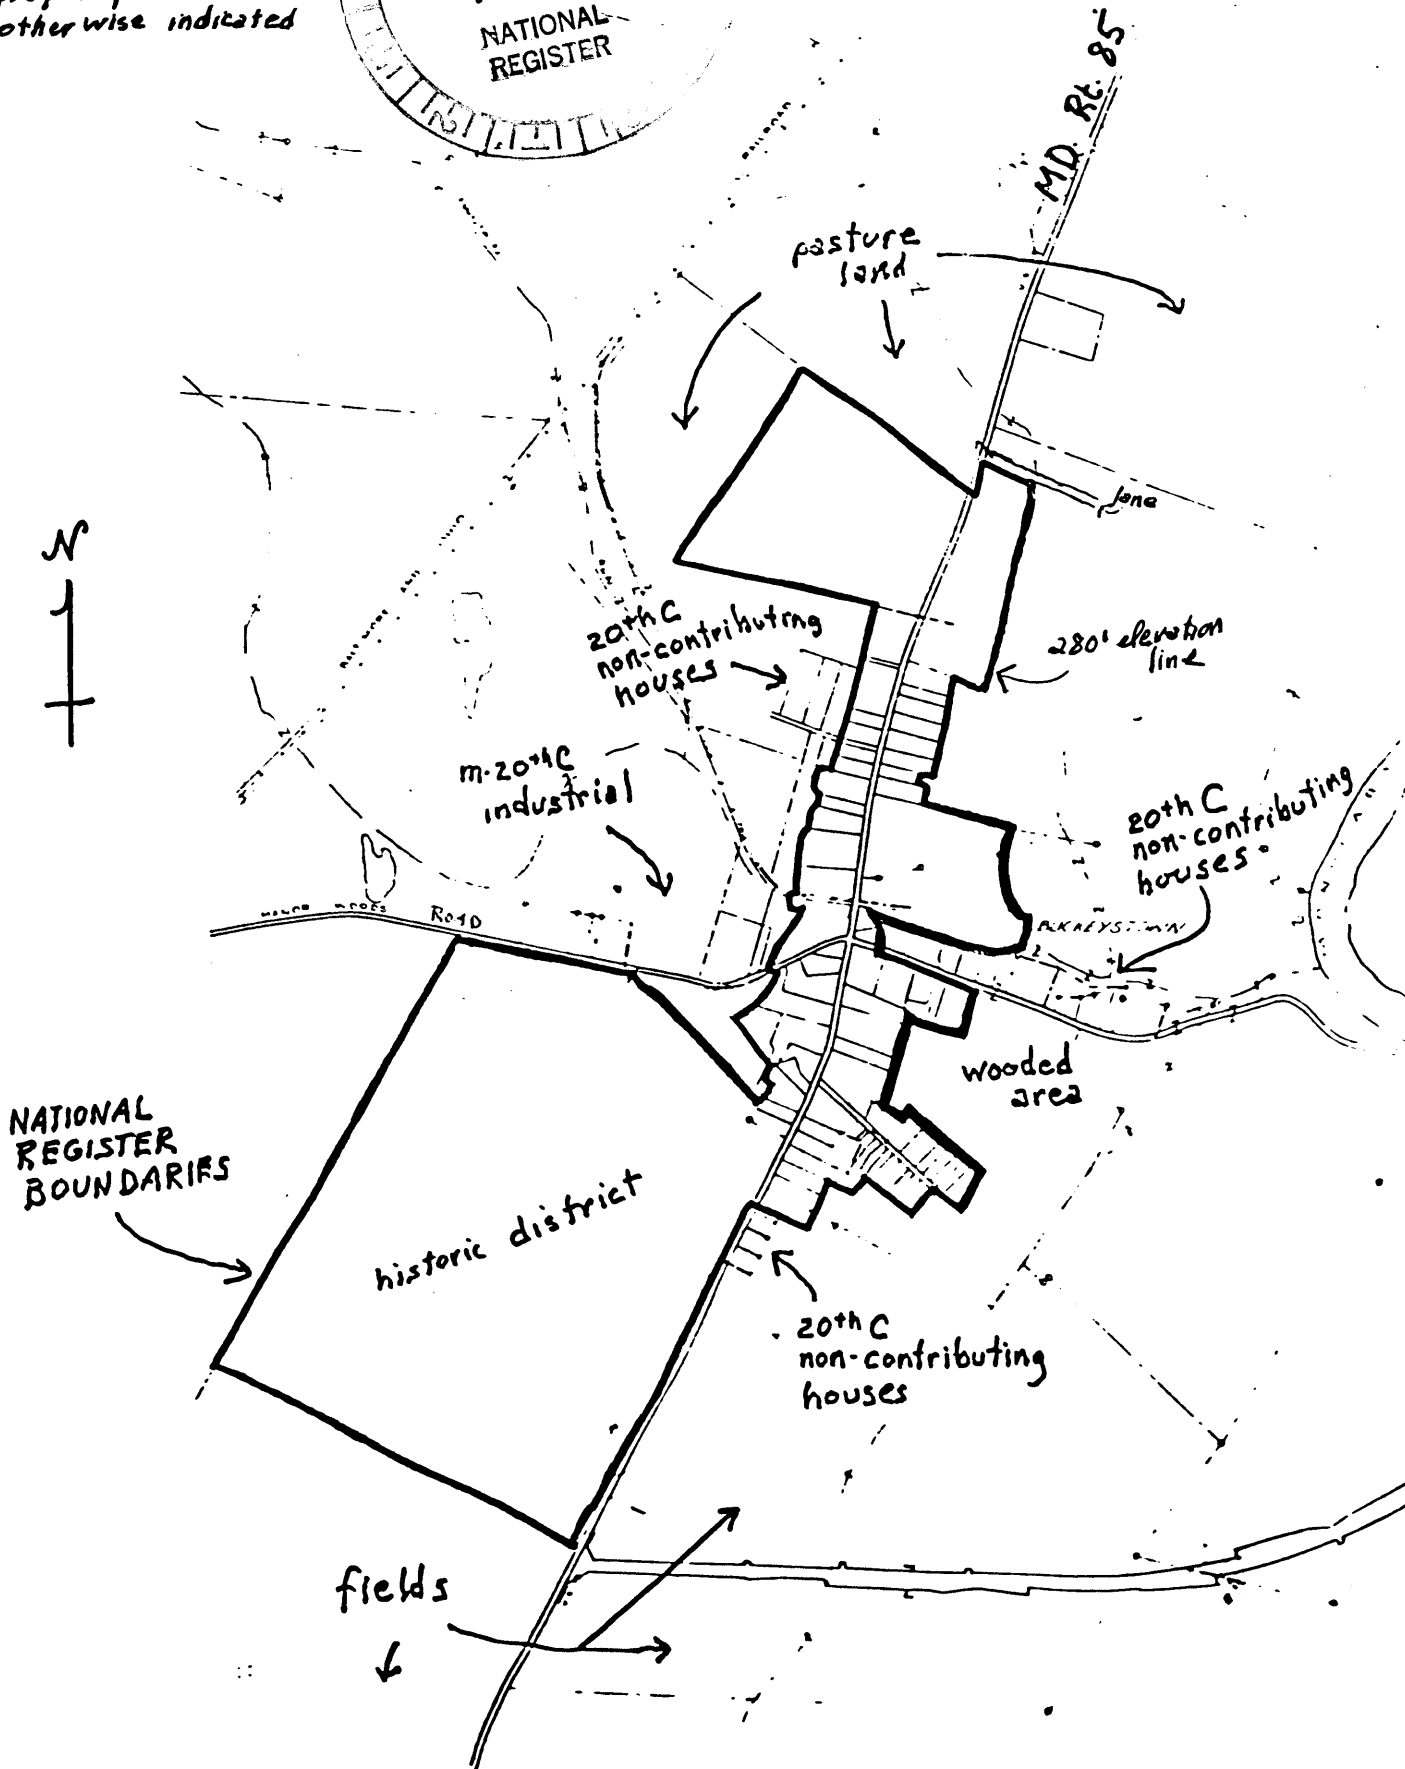

Springdale (#26) is located at the edge of the historic district in the southwest corner of the town and on lot #5, one of the original Carrollton Manor farm lots. The farmhouse was built in the late eighteenth century as a tenant house for Carrollton Manor which spread over 19,000 acres in the south part of Frederick County. It was owned by Charles Carroll and his heirs until 1852 when it was purchased by Charles Simmons. Simmons was instrumental in the construction of the second Methodist Protestant Church in Buckeystown which was built on the site of the existing Methodist Protestant Church in 1867. He donated land for the church after a minister with Union sentiments split the community in the original Methodist Church during the Civil War. The house and land continues its eighteenth century use as a working farm.
