DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Gordon House, a brick home standing about 1/2 mile south of State Highway 50 near the Duck River (on the dividing line between present Hickman and Maury counties), is believed to be as originally constructed by John Gordon's wife in 1818. The two-story house appears to be of the late Georgian style, but carries the flavor of the Tennessee frontier, i.e., the floor plan consisting of one-room depth, end-wall fireplaces and corresponding rooms with fireplaces overhead, are also features of the dog-trot houses of the early nineteenth century.

The home, facing south, has four large rooms: upper and lower rooms on the west side are about 18' x 18'; upper and lower rooms on the east side are about 12' x 18' in size. The four fireplaces are over-sized, and a wide stairway stands next to the north wall, leading to the second story. The bricks are slightly oversized, but whether made commercially or on the plantation is unknown.

There are three large, evenly spaced windows in the walls of the lower and top levels, with two doors that give balance and symmetry to the front elevation. The present second-story front porch roof, supported by four square wooden columns, is reportedly a recent (about 1947-48) addition.

The home's interior, said to have been decorated by Gordon's wife (who supervised the home's construction, as Captain Gordon was away at that time fighting in the Seminole Indian War), is not elaborate but is nicely finished. The fireplace mantels are wooden with a combination of simply designed pilasters and panels; the wide, 7-foot-high doors are of poplar; the board flooring is of ash and poplar; there are plain, wide chair rails and baseboards, and the brick walls have been covered on the interior with white paint. The stairwell is guarded by wooden banisters and newels, supporting a moulded railing.

A contemporary frame addition to the rear (north) wall of the house remains intact, but will most likely be removed when the original house is restored.

The home, occupied until purchased in 1969 by the State of Tennessee, stands in a state of good repair; it is solidly built and will, with restoration and care, see many years of use.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Gordon House was the home of Captain John Gordon, famed Indian fighter, and was one of the first private brick buildings within a 30-mile radius. Captain Gordon was awarded large grants of land by the government in recognition of his services; on part of his land, near Duck River, he built this home, reputed to have been one of the finest in the country.

John Gordon, born in 1763 near Fredericksburg, Virginia, came to Nashville about 1786. In 1793, he was commissioned by Governor Blount of Tennessee to be a Captain of mounted infantry of the Davidson County regiment. In 1795 he was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Davidson County, and the next year was designated the first postmaster of Nashville. During the years 1790-95, Gordon established himself as an Indian fighter, defending the Cumberland Settlement against attack from hostile Cherokee and Creek Indians. In 1801-02, when the army was widening and clearing the Natchez Trace from Nashville to Natchez, Mississippi, Gordon made an agreement with the Chickasaw Chief, George Colbert, to operate a trading post and ferry on the Duck River, near the site of the home Mrs. Gordon would begin in 1817. After the treaty of 1805 when the Indians gave their lands in this area to the United States government, Gordon received 640 acres on the Duck River from the Tennessee General Assembly in 1806. Sometime between 1808 and 1812, Gordon moved his family from Nashville to Duck River (nearby Gordonsburg is named for John Gordon). During the Creek Indian Campaign of 1813-14, Gordon led a company of "spies" under General Andrew Jackson's command. After the war Gordon returned home, but joined with the military again in 1818 (when his home was completed) during the Seminole Indian Campaign. He became ill while campaigning and died in 1819, leaving a wife and large family.

Gordon's house, ferry, and trading post stood near the Old Natchez Trace, a primitive Indian trail which was the main highway to the Old Southwest from the mid-1780's to 1830. Gordon operated his commercial enterprise where the Trace crossed the Duck River, when the legendary figures of Andrew Jackson, Sam Houston, Davy Crockett (and assorted types of boatmen, merchants, soldiers, murderers, thieves, et.al.) traveled the historic route until the advent of the steamboat in the late 1820's. Recognizing the importance of the Tennessee landmark, officials of the Natchez Trace Parkway (National Park Service, Department of the Interior) have included the Gordon House in their plans for interpretative use, as part of the Parkway's Living History program. The home is to be restored to its original appearance, with demonstrations presented of frontier life in the early 1800's.
