DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Harrison Boulevard Historic District, comprised of 427 residences, a church, and an elementary school, is centered on Harrison Boulevard, a wide tree-lined street with large well-maintained dwellings. A landscaped parkway with street lamps dating from 1916 runs down the center of the Boulevard.

The city center of Boise lies closest to the south-east corner of the district, and the streets run on a north-south, east-west grid. The north-south streets are the main thoroughfares of the district, Harrison Boulevard being the most heavily traveled. The majority of the houses face 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th streets and Harrison Boulevard (the north-south streets), with each block bisected by an alleyway designed to concentrate services at the rear rather than on the street side of the dwellings.

The Harrison Boulevard Historic District is bounded on the east by 15th Street, a wide, heavily traveled street which carries traffic from the city center to the newly developed Foothill area which borders the District on the north. To the west, the district extends to include the south portion of 20th Street. Resseguie Street forms the southern boundary of the district. South of this, commercial establishments and new apartment buildings and houses predominate. District boundaries were drawn where the number of heavily remodeled and undistinguished houses begin to intrude on the character of a given area.

A wide variety of architectural styles is found in the district, with Bungalows and Queen Anne cottages being the most widely represented. Residences in the various revival styles, Colonial, Tudor, and Mission, are also scattered throughout the district. The houses vary greatly in size, the largest generally being found on the south end of Harrison, 17th, 18th, and 19th streets, although spacious houses are found in other sections as well. There are a number of very modest residences in the district, too. Common types are Bungalows and small square frame houses with pyramidal roofs and no ornamentation. Most of the dwellings are of frame or brick construction, although stucco and stone buildings are also found throughout the area.

The houses are for the most part very well kept, and the quiet tree-lined streets retain a neighborhood quality. Residents are displaying pride in the historic value of the Harrison Boulevard area by striving to keep disruptive traffic to a minimum, fighting to save trees which might be jeopardized by development, and restoring the old residences.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Harrison Boulevard Historic District is characterized by a number of architectural features and historical elements which combine to make the area significant in the history of the City of Boise. The great richness and diversity of architectural styles in the district reflect the growth and cultural development of the city, and most of the streetscapes in the area remain undisturbed by modern development. Mature trees line the streets and care is taken to preserve and renew them, as they contribute a great deal to the character of the district. Many prominent Boise citizens have lived in the Harrison Boulevard Historic District and architect J. E. Tourtelotte designed a number of residences of various styles in the area. The Harrison Boulevard District remains as one of the primary residential parts of Boise, with much preservation and restoration activity in evidence.

The Harrison Boulevard Historic District centers on one of the primary residential streets in the City of Boise. A wide avenue flanked by mature trees, Harrison Boulevard features a parkway down its center, landscaped with flowering trees and newly renovated street lamps dating from 1916. The Boulevard has been a street of large well-kept homes since the days of its development during the first decade of this century. The name Harrison Boulevard was given to this gracious street after the 1891 visit of President Benjamin Harrison, the first visit by a President to the state.

The Harrison Boulevard Historic District displays a great richness of residential architectural style: large, elaborate Queen Anne residences and the smaller adaptations of this style for modest dwellings, Bungalows in great variety, Tudor Revival, Colonial Revival, and Mission Revival styles, as well as Moderne, can all be found. The variety is not limited to style, however. The District includes dwellings of the most modest proportions and design as well as residences which are imposing in size and clearly segregated, and a unique feature of the district is that an impressive, elaborate building may sit next to a modest dwelling and neither loses by this proximity.

When detailing the significance of an area or district as large as the Harrison Boulevard District, it is tempting to look at the buildings alone and see only examples of various architectural styles and greater or lesser degrees of skill in their design and execution. In a district as diverse as this, however, it is necessary to look beyond the physical boundaries and the dates of construction of the buildings in order to determine the origin of the unique character of the area.

A very significant aspect of this district is that its buildings and neighborhoods reflect the changing architectural and social patterns of the city. The kind of growth which produced such a mixture of modest and elaborate houses seems to have been with the city from its earliest days. | 1. | 15A | 820 Harrison Boulevard
The one-story stucco house at 820 Harrison Boulevard displays a broad hipped roof and a central gabled entrance. A wing projects to the left and a chimney is seen on the left end wall of the house. The wing and another projecting section at the back of the house are probably later additions to the original square building. (1911) |
| 2. | 16A | 900 Harrison Boulevard
This large one-and-a-half-story brick and frame residence with steep intersecting gables and flared eaves was originally built for Emulous Wallace in 1906. A gabled bay projects to the left and its asymmetrical steeply gabled roof sweeps down to shelter the central entry. (1905) |
| 3. | 17A | 906 Harrison Boulevard
906 Harrison Boulevard is a one-story frame Colonial Revival house with a side-facing gabled roof and a small wing to the left. The facade is symmetrical with tall narrow multi-light windows and a modest barrel-vaulted portico with columns. |
| 4. | 18A | 912 Harrison Boulevard
912 Harrison Boulevard is a one-story frame residence with several low intersecting hipped roofs. Shallow projecting bays are seen at either end of the facade, and a recessed entry with Roman Doric details, a simple entablature, and large tri-partite windows are additional architectural elements. The house was built in 1940 by construction man Harry Morrison. (1940) |
| 5. | 19A | 901 Harrison Boulevard
901 Harrison Boulevard is a two-story house of stucco built in 1912 by R. S. Shaw. It has a low gabled tile roof facing the street with wide eaves and diagonal brackets. Low arches frame the front sun-room windows as well as the right-of-center entry porch. A shed roof spans the facade and shelters the entry and sun porch. (1912) |
| 6. | 20A | 907 Harrison Boulevard
This two-story frame Colonial Revival residence with a gabled roof and right-of-center entry was designed by architects Wayland & Fennell for C. A. Carter in 1911. Sidelights ornament the entrance and multi-light sash windows are additional features. (1911) |

7.	21A	911 Harrison Boulevard 911 Harrison Boulevard is a two-story frame Colonial Revival dwelling with a side-facing gabled roof. A left-of-center entry is framed by pilasters supporting an entablature with projecting cornice. (1940)
8.	22A	915 Harrison Boulevard This two-story residence was designed by architects Nisbet & Paradice in 1910 for mining man T. K. Little. A porch runs the length of the facade and is topped by a balustrade. The truncated hipped roof has a central hipped dormer, and the symmetry of the design accentuates the box-like proportions of the house. (1910)
9.	23A	919 Harrison Boulevard The two-story residence at 919 Harrison Boulevard was built for Boise womens' apparel store owner S. E. Brookover in 1921. This stucco and brick house has a gambrel roof with large dormer-like projections running the length of the house, front and rear. The central portion of the roof sweeps up gently above a Palladian type window, and a central vaulted portico with square pillars shelters the entrance. (1921)
10.	19B	1002 Harrison Boulevard 1002 Harrison Boulevard is a one-and-a-half-story brick & stucco Tudor Revival-style residence with a steep gabled roof and half timbering. The left-of-center arched doorway is set in a projecting brick bay. A small shed roof dormer intersects the roof to the right. The house was built for Walter Dufresne in 1925. (1925)
11.	21B	1020 Harrison Boulevard This one-story brick residence with a steep, gable roof which almost reaches the ground was built by J. C. Jordan in 1936. A small street-facing gabled bay intersects the main roof on the left. Small windows with many lights, some of them diamond-shaped, add to the English cottage effect created by the low, broad, shingled roof. (1936)
12.	23B	1005 Harrison Boulevard 1005 Harrison Boulevard is a two-story frame residence with a low hipped roof, and an unusual pattern of clapboard siding which varies in width for a decorative effect. The foundation and stoop are of cast stone. A facade-spanning porch with hipped roof and central portico accents the symmetrical design of this house. (1910)

| 13. | 24B | 1009 Harrison Boulevard
The two-and-a-half-story frame residence at 1009 Harrison Boulevard has a hipped roof, exposed rafters, central dormer, and front porch running the length of the facade. The symmetrical box-like proportions are common in the larger dwellings built in Boise at the time this house was built in 1909. (1909) |
| 14. | 25B | 1017 Harrison Boulevard
1017 Harrison Boulevard is a two-and-a-half-story frame residence with slightly flared hipped roof and central hipped-roof dormer. This house is very similar to 1009 next door although a portion of the hipped-roof porch has been enclosed to make a sun room. The house was built in 1909 by Francis Sanders. (1909) |
| 15. | 26B | 1021 Harrison Boulevard
The one-and-a-half-story frame residence at 1021 Harrison Boulevard was described as a Bungalow at the time it was built for mining man Manford Coffin in 1909. Architect J. E. Tourtelotte designed the house with a pyramidal roof intersected front and side by large gabled dormers with exposed rafters. A broad columned porch spans the facade and also displays exposed rafters. The sweeping roof lines give the house a horizontal appearance, though it is almost square in its actual proportions. (1909) |
| 16. | 28B | 1106 Harrison Boulevard
1106 Harrison Boulevard is a one-and-a-half-story stucco residence with Bungalow influence in its pyramidal roof with two gabled projections on each end and central hipped roof dormer. Exposed rafters ornament the eaves and dormer of this residence, built in 1929 by mining engineer Arthur Stevens. (1929) |
| 17. | 29B | 1112 Harrison Boulevard
This one-and-a-half-story frame house with Colonial Revival influence has a clipped gable roof with two gabled dormers. A gabled portico with eave returns frames the central entry in this residence, which was built in 1923 for Harry J. Bingham. (1923) |
| 18. | 30B | 1118 Harrison Boulevard
1118 Harrison Boulevard is a one-story stucco residence built by contractor J. A. Terteling in 1936. An outset entry with gabled roof intersects the main side-facing gable. Tall, narrow windows with multiple lights indicate a Tudor Revival influence. (1936) |

| 19. | 31B | 1103 Harrison Boulevard
The dwelling at 1103 Harrison Boulevard has a steep roof with intersecting gables, exposed rafters, and tall chimney stack. A right-of-center entry is accentuated by a small gable, and a shallow projecting bay is seen to the side on the left. The house was built in 1930 by Ross Cady. (1930) |
| 20. | 32B | 1107 Harrison Boulevard
This two-story brick residence at 1107 Harrison Boulevard has a truncated hipped roof and center portico of Doric columns supporting an entablature. The symmetrical facade is ornamented by a band of decorative brickwork under the eaves. The dwelling was built by J. D. Orr in 1937. (1937) |
| 21. | 33B | 1111 Harrison Boulevard
The residence at 1111 Harrison Boulevard is a one-and-a-half-story brick Tudor Revival-style house with a projecting bay intersecting a gabled roof. A tall decorative multiple-chimney stack is seen to the left of the bay and a shed-roof dormer to the right. A smaller gable to the right is half timbered, as are the end gables. This handsome house was built for R. E. Newhouse in 1938. (1938) |
| 22. | 34B | 1117 Harrison Boulevard
The large house at 1117 Harrison Boulevard displays a broad lateral gable with a projecting gabled section at the left end of the facade. A shallow bow window is seen at the right side of the facade above a low tile patio. This one-story brick house is of recent construction but is compatible with other houses in the area. (1950) |
| 23. | 22C | 1200 Harrison Boulevard
This one-and-a-half-story brick and half-timber residence displays Tudor Revival elements in its steep intersecting gables, tall chimney stack, recessed entry, and narrow multi-light windows. (1929) |
| 24. | 23C | 1206 Harrison Boulevard
1206 Harrison Boulevard is a modest, one-story frame and stone cottage with a gabled roof facing the street and a small gabled overdoor. It was built in 1932 for Pearl Hastings. (1932) |

| 26. | 25C | 1220 Harrison Boulevard
1220 Harrison Boulevard is a two-story frame Colonial Revival house with a central portico with Doric columns accenting the symmetrical plan of the dwelling. Sidelights and transom ornamenting the entrance and chimneys at each end of the house are additional features. (1936) |
| 27. | 26C | 1201 Harrison Boulevard
1201 Harrison Boulevard is a two-story brick Georgian Revival residence with hipped roof and large central two-story portico that has Corinthian columns. A porch surmounted by a balustrade runs the length of the house and a similar balustrade is found on the one-story bay window on the left side of the house. Architects Nisbet and Paradice built this handsome residence for J. W. Oakes, owner of Oakes & Co. wholesale grocers, in 1913. (1913) |
| 28. | 27C | 1213 Harrison Boulevard
This large two-story clapboard residence has a low hipped roof and central portico with Doric pillars supporting an entablature. Side lights frame the door, and the symmetrical plan indicates Colonial Revival influence on this dwelling built for Al Kennard in 1920. (1920) |
| 29. | 28C | 1221 Harrison Boulevard
The one-story brick house at 1221 Harrison Boulevard anticipates the ranch-style houses of the postwar era in its design, although it was built in 1938. The long low massing is emphasized by the side-facing gable roof, interrupted only by a shallow gabled section. Colonial Revival details are also seen on this dwelling built for Dr. R. S. Smith. (1938) |
| 30. | 29C | 1304 Harrison Boulevard
This one-and-a-half-story Queen Anne residence is of sandstone and frame construction. The hipped roof is dominated by two large dormers, the front facing one being gabled and the side dormer having a modified hipped roof. The eaves are flared and a porch wraps around the house to the right, while the entrance is marked by a small pediment. The dwelling was built in 1901 for John Myer. (1901) |

| 33. | 33C | 1305 Harrison Boulevard
1305 Harrison Boulevard is a handsome two-and-a-half-story Queen Anne residence of rusticated sandstone and decorative shingles designed by Boise architect J. E. Tourtelotte for Eugene Looney in 1905. A round tower with conical roof, flared eaves, and a finial is seen to the left. The roof consists of multiple intersecting gables, and a tall stone chimney stack rises to the left. The broad columned porch wraps around the house to the left and the entrance is marked by a small pediment. (1905) |
| 34. | 34C | 1311 Harrison Boulevard
The residence at 1311 Harrison Boulevard displays a steep lateral gable roof pierced by a tall chimney stack a bit to the left of center, a shallow projecting bay at the center of the facade, and an entrance to the right. The house is one and a half stories in height and is of frame and stone construction. (1936) |

1510 Harrison Boulevard is a two-story Colonial Revival brick and frame residence with gabled roof and two gabled dormers. The entry is framed by pilasters and entablature and is centered in the symmetrical facade. (1941) |
| 45. | 19D | 1516 Harrison Boulevard
This one-story stucco house has a gabled roof with a projecting bay with an asymmetrical gabled roof to the right. The arched door and small arched windows in the gables, combined with the steep asymmetrical gables, recall the Tudor Revival style. (1930) |
| 46. | 21D | 1505 Harrison Boulevard
1505 Harrison Boulevard is a large two-and-a-half-story Mission-style residence designed by J. E. Tourtelotte for G. W. Bond in 1911. A deeply recessed porch with Tuscan columns runs the length of the house, and the second-story windows project slightly and display decorative brackets beneath. The low hipped roof is of red tile. A small balcony projects above the central entry, and a central dormer emphasizes the box-like proportions of the stucco dwelling. Large decorative glass lanterns are suspended from the porch ceiling. (1911) |
| 47. | 22D | 1509 Harrison Boulevard
This two-story frame house has narrow clapboard siding and a hipped roof which is intersected by two hipped-roof dormers on the right side. A one-story entry porch also projects to the right and a decorative circular window is seen just under the eaves. (1910) |

| 225. | 26F | 1912 North 17th Street
The two-story frame house at 1912 North 17th Street displays steep intersecting gables and a porch which wraps around to the right, now partially enclosed. A pair of windows is seen under the gables on the facade and the entrance is centrally placed. (1906) |
| 226. | 24G | 1918 North 17th Street
1918 North 17th Street is a one-story house with a hipped roof and facade-spanning porch also with a hipped roof. The facade design is symmetrical, and the porch openings of this modest residence are arched. (1908) |
| 227. | 25G | 1920 North 17th Street
This Queen Anne cottage is constructed of brick, decorative shingle, and stone. A shallow curved bay window is seen to the right, the gabled roof with flared eaves is complex in design, and a small corner porch is ornamented with decorative columns. The house shares many features with the cottages at 1919 and 1913 North 17th Street, just across the street. (1905) |
| 228. | 26G | 1924 North 17th Street
The Bungalow at 1924 North 17th Street displays double street gables, the smaller of which shelters the enclosed front porch. Exposed rafters, narrow wooden siding, and a simple rectangular plan are additional Bungalow features of this one-story frame residence, built in 1911. (1911) |
| 229. | 27G | 1930 North 17th Street
The modest residence at 1930 North 17th Street has a hipped roof with a low hipped roof on the facade-spanning porch. A small gabled wing projects to the right. The design of the building is simple and symmetrical. (1906) |
| 230. | 28G | 1934 North 17th Street
The one-story frame house at 1934 North 17th Street is almost identical to the one next door at 1930. A hipped roof and facade-spanning porch are its main features, along with a simple shape and symmetrical design. (1910) |
| 231. | 29G | 1938 North 17th Street
In 1908 carpenter Benjamin Frank Orr built this two-story frame house at 1938 North 17th Street. The broad gabled roof shelters the residence, and the entrance at the side is marked by a bracketed, gabled overdoor. Leaded glass is seen in some of the windows. (1908) |

| 233. | 27F | 1700 Irene (1901 North 17th Street)
The large two-story brick house at 1700 Irene was built in 1898 by brickyard owner Frank Foster. Steep twin gables intersect a large gabled wing and a gabled entry is set into the intersection. The massing is vertical and is enhanced by tall narrow windows with relieving arches. A shallow, curved bay window is found on the right. (1898) |
| 234. | 28F | 1913 North 17th Street
The modest Bungalow at 1913 North 17th Street features a gabled porch roof facing the street, a flared base, bracketed eaves, and extended roof rafters. (c. 1920) |
| 235. | 32G | 1915 North 17th Street
The Queen Anne cottage at 1915 North 17th Street is one of three very similar residences in this block. The one-and-a-half-story house is of brick, stone, and decorative shingle. A curved bay, relieving arches above the windows, leaded glass, flared eaves, and a complex gabled roof line add to the decorative effect. (1907) |
| 236. | 33G | 1919 North 17th Street
The one-and-a-half-story brick, stone, and shingle Queen Anne cottage at 1919 North 17th Street features a steep gabled roof with flared eaves, a flared porch roof, and decorative shingle and brick work. A small gabled bay window projects to the left. (1904) |
| 237. | 34G | 1923 North 17th Street

The small frame cottage at 2002 North 17th Street has steep intersecting gables with eave returns, a bay window on the right side of the house, and a right-of-center entry. Vertical wooden siding and windows are seen on the gables of this one-and-a-half-story frame residence built in 1905. (1905) |
| 239. | 36G | 2001 North 17th Street
In 1899 architect J. E. Tourtelotte designed this graceful cottage for dairy farmer George Vaughn. The steep hipped roof with flared eaves is crowned by a unique arrangement of tall narrow dormers with high hipped roofs. Three dormers project to the left above the pillared wrap-around porch, and one is seen at the center front. A graceful bay window projects to the right of center front. A graceful bay window projects to the right of the porch entry. The one-and-a-half-story residence is of frame construction with much decorative shingle work and leaded glass. (1899) |
| 240. | 20I | 617 North 18th Street
The large two-story frame residence at 617 North 18th Street was built about 1913 by W. B. Hartman. A steep side-facing gabled roof has a wide shed-roof dormer which extends almost the entire width of the roof. A left-of-center entry porch and one-story hipped-roof wing to the right both display extended rafters and are probably later additions. (1913) |
| 241. | 21I | 621 North 18th Street
The broad side-facing gable roof with large gabled central dormer and facade-spanning pillared porch found in this one-and-a-half-story frame and brick house were popular design elements for substantial homes in Boise when this house was built in 1912. (1912) |
| 242. | 22I | 703 North 18th Street
Square massing, a hipped roof with central hipped roof dormers front and side, and a left-of-center porch are features of this two-and-a-half-story frame house at 703 North 18th Street. A bay window projects to the left. (1909) |
| 243. | 9I | 704 North 18th Street

The one-story stucco bungalow at 802 North 18th Street displays many typical bungalow features such as a battered chimney, paired windows, and street-facing gables. Unique decorative features added by F. H. Roseboom in 1922 are the fan-shaped porch windows delineated by stucco frames and accented with wooden mullions. (1922) |
| 245. | 11I | 808 North 18th Street
The Tudor Revival residence at 808 North 18th Street displays half-timber and brick construction, steep gables, an irregular plan, arched doors, and tall chimney stacks. (1931) |
| 246. | 12I | 814 North 18th Street
A one-and-a-half-story stucco and brick house at 814 North 18th Street is also in the Tudor Revival style. It has a slightly projecting half-timber dormer, steep gabled roof, and irregular brick work accenting the stucco. (1933) |
| 247. | 13I | 818 North 18th Street
The large stone, brick, and frame house at 818 North 18th Street is highly unusual in its design. A high stone foundation elevates the house and stone arches support the wide porches which span two sides. A corner entry is marked by a gabled portico, and large intersecting gables form the roof. Leaded glass windows are an added decorative feature. (1907) |
| 248. | 15I | 801 North 18th Street
The one-story frame Bungalow at 801 North 18th Street displays a large street-facing gable repeated in the smaller gabled porch roof. The wide eaves are bracketed and the barge boards have simple slits cut in them for a decorative effect. (1921) |
| 249. | 16I | 805 North 18th Street
The double street-facing gables of this simple Bungalow at 805 North 18th Street have the same decorative slits in the barge boards as the house at 801. The house is one story and of frame construction, with typical extended rafters and bracketed eaves. (1921) |

A steep clipped gable roof is intersected by a large clipped gabled dormer on the left side. The front porch, which spans the facade of this two-story frame residence, is sheltered by a hipped roof. (1910) |
| 280. | 21K | 1202 North 18th Street
This small cottage is built of the cast stone which became a popular construction material in Boise during the first decade of this century. The low hipped roof with flared eaves shows some Queen Anne influence. A small square corner entry porch with flat roof is an unusual feature. (1905) |
| 281. | 22K | 1212 North 18th Street
This modest one-story house with intersecting gables, pent eaves, and small right-of-center pillared porch is constructed of the cast stone found in several houses in this block. (1905) |
| 282. | 23K | 1220 North 18th Street
1220 North 18th Street is a modest brick and frame cottage with a steep hipped roof broken by a large gabled dormer above a columned facade-spanning porch. Shed-roof dormers project from each side of the main roof. (1907) |
| 283. | 24K | 1226 North 18th Street
The two-story frame residence at 1226 North 18th Street displays twin gabled dormers, symmetrical design, and a steep side-facing gabled roof. The verticality of the overall massing is emphasized by the tall narrow shape of the dormers. (1902) |
| 284. | 27K | 1215 North 18th Street
The residence at 1215 North 18th Street is a large cast-stone Bungalow built in 1911 by contractor W. E. Leitner. A porch with a street-facing gable projects to the left and intersects a low sweeping pyramidal roof with a large cross gable. Diagonal brackets and exposed rafters are additional features. (1911) |
| 285. | 8L | 1302 North 18th Street
Two large intersecting gables and broad bracketed eaves are features of this frame one-story Bungalow. Paired windows on either side of a tapered chimney and a sun porch are additional features. A. E. Ihrig built this house and the two Bungalows at 1304 and 1308 North 18th Street in 1911. (1911) |

| 286. | 9L | 1304 North 18th Street
The Bungalow at 1304 North 18th Street displays a main hipped roof with a street-facing gabled portion above the porch at the left of the facade. Small windows flank the chimney on the right side of the house, and exposed rafters are additional Bungalow elements on the one-story frame house built in 1911 by A. E. Ihrig. (1911) |
| 287. | 10L | 1308 North 18th Street
A broad lateral gable with a gabled central dormer, paired pillars supporting the roof of the facade-spanning porch, and exposed rafters are features of this one-story frame Bungalow built in 1911 by A. E. Ihrig. (1911) |
| 288. | 11L | 1314 North 18th Street
The one-and-a-half-story frame house with cast-stone foundation at 1314 North 18th Street has a broad street-facing gable with wide bracketed eaves and a hipped roof above the facade-spanning porch. Double windows are seen under the gable. (1911) |
| 289. | 13L | 1301 North 18th Street
The large Bungalow at 1301 North 18th Street displays the typical double street-facing gables of the style. A large dormer projects at the right, and the eaves of this one-and-a-half-story brick and stucco home are bracketed. (1910) |
| 290. | 14L | 1307 North 18th Street
The one-story frame Bungalow with a cast-stone foundation at 1307 North 18th Street was built in 1916 by contractor A. E. Woodman. The low hipped roof is intersected at the right by a shallow projecting gabled bay. A broad tapered chimney is seen on the facade just to the left of the central entry. (1916) |
| 291. | 18L | 1401 North 18th Street
1401 North 18th Street is a modest Queen Anne cottage with intersecting gables with decorative shingles, a central bay which projects slightly, and a recessed entry to the left of the bay. The house is of frame construction and is one story in height. (1906) |

| 292. | 30F | 1902 North 18th Street
The Queen Anne cottage at 1902 North 18th Street displays decorative shingles in the gable facing the street and in the small gable intersecting it to the right, flared eaves, and a porch which wraps around the house to the right. The entry is set in the corner of the porch, and a small pediment marks the door. The house is of brick and frame construction and is one and a half stories in height. (1910) |
| 293. | 27I | 706 North 19th Street
The modest one-story frame Bungalow at 706 North 19th Street features a flared base, double street-facing gables with bracketed eaves, and extended roof rafters. (1919) |
| 294. | 28I | 710 North 19th Street
The large rusticated stone and half-timber dwelling at 710 North 19th Street displays a broad side-facing gable intersected by a gabled central dormer, wide bracketed eaves, and a facade-spanning porch sheltered by the main roof. The handsome stone work of alternating wide and narrow courses is a unique feature of this residence, which was built c. 1911. (c. 1911) |
| 295. | 29I | 714 North 19th Street
Another one-story frame Bungalow is found at 714 North 19th Street. It displays the shallow roof line, extended roof rafters, flared base, and small gabled portico typical of the style in modest dwellings. (1921) |
| 296. | 30I | 720 North 19th Street
The residence at 720 North 19th Street displays a blend of Bungalow features and Queen Anne elements. The pronounced street-facing gables, exposed rafters, and low roof indicate the Bungalow influence. The irregularly placed decorative windows and bays suggest the Queen Anne in this one-and-a-half-story frame and brick residence. (1911) |
| 297. | 31I | 701 North 19th Street
A steep hipped roof is intersected by a very steep asymmetrical gabled roof on a left-of-center bay with a round arched door. This one-and-a-half-story residence is of frame construction. (1929) |

The large one-and-a-half-story frame Bungalow at 805 North 19th Street displays a pronounced street-facing gabled dormer, a flared base, extended roof rafters, and a shed-roof porch on the left. The horizontal direction is emphasized by bands of windows in the dormer and on the enclosed porch. (1910) |
| 306. | 38J | 809 North 19th Street
The frame residence at 809 North 19th Street shows a street-facing gabled roof which is echoed by a slightly projecting gabled bay to the left and a small gabled entry. The frame house was built in 1923 by William Antrim. (1923) |
| 307. | 39J | 817 North 19th Street
This large two-and-a-half-story house is almost a duplicate of the residence at 707 North 19th, with its hipped roof with left-of-center gable interrupting its front face, columned porch with small gabled pediment marking the entrance, and bay window on the left side of the house. (1911) |
| 308. | 40J | 819 North 19th Street
The half-timber, stucco, and frame Bungalow at 819 North 19th Street displays the typical flared base, battered porch piers, and double street-facing gables with brackets. (1911) |
| 309. | 41J | 902 North 19th Street
Street Commissioner Silas Burnham had this one-story Bungalow built in 1911 at 902 North 19th Street. A large gable covers the front porch and is repeated by a smaller side-gabled bay. Extended roof rafters, flared base, and horizontal massing are other Bungalow features. (1911) |
| 310. | 42J | 906 North 19th Street
The Bungalow at 906 North 19th Street is very similar to its next-door neighbor (902) in general design. The side-gabled bay, however, is seen here as a large gabled dormer, diminishing the horizontal effect found in 902 and recalling the earlier, more vertical styles. (1910) |
| 311. | 43J | 910 North 19th Street
A hipped roof with a ridge and a large central hipped-roof dormer give this residence at 910 North 19th Street a very horizontal direction. A facade-spanning porch is sheltered by the low roof, and paired windows flank the chimney. (1911) |

| 312. | 44J | 916 North 19th Street
A single large street-facing gable roof covers this large Bungalow. Decorative barge boards, tie beams and collar beams supported by diagonal brackets, and paired porch pillars add to the ornamental effect, while a slightly projecting bay is seen to the right. (1910) |
| 313. | 45J | 918 North 19th Street
A complex series of intersecting low clipped gables is the dominant feature of this one-story frame Bungalow. The horizontal massing and tapered chimney flanked by a pair of windows and a tapered base are additional Bungalow elements. (1922) |
| 314. | 46J | 901 North 19th Street
A double street-facing gable with extended roof rafters and brackets are features of this Bungalow built in 1911 by David Newman. The bands of windows emphasize the horizontal direction established by the low roof. (1911) |
| 315. | 47J | 905 North 19th Street
Yet another one-story frame Bungalow displays the typical street-facing gables with extended rafters, flared base, and horizontal massing. The gabled roof of the left-of-center porch meets a small shed roof which shelters a front bay. (1911) |
| 316. | 48J | 909 North 19th Street
The one-and-a-half-story residence at 909 North 19th Street displays some interesting variations on typical Bungalow elements. The flared base is echoed in a shallow bay window to the right and again in a gabled dormer with small multi-light window. A pair of windows flanks the chimney, and the porch roof is supported by pairs of pillars. (1910) |
| 317. | 49J | 915 North 19th Street
A large bracketed gable shelters the porch of this one-and-a-half-story frame house at 915 North 19th Street. A gabled bay to the left echoes the larger gable of the main roof. (1911) |
| 318. | 50J | 919 North 19th Street
A large gabled bay projects on the right of the facade of this one-and-a-half-story frame residence. The extended roof rafters and battered porch piers reflect Bungalow influence, while a series of triple windows emphasizes the horizontal direction. (1922) |

The large two-and-a-half-story house at 1002 North 19th Street was built in 1911 by Hezekiah and Lucy Saunders. A low hipped roof is interrupted by a right-of-center gable, and a hipped roof covers a full front porch. (1911) |
| 320. | 30K | 1004 North 19th Street
The box-like shape of this residence is emphasized by the symmetrical layout. A hipped roof, facade-spanning porch, central hipped-roof dormer, and exposed rafters are familiar features on this two-and-a-half-story dwelling built in 1910. (1910) |
| 321. | 31K | 1012 North 19th Street
The residence at 1012 North 19th Street has a large gabled roof over the front porch, paired porch pillars on piers, and wide bracketed eaves. The one-story Bungalow is of brick and frame construction. (1911) |
| 322. | 32K | 1016 North 19th Street
1016 North 19th Street features an unusual detail in the large steep gable which extends downward to the first story, ending in a pent eave. The main section of the two-and-a-half-story stucco residence is covered by a gabled roof which intersects the ornamental gable. A porch wraps around the house to the left, and a bay window is seen to the right. (1908) |

In 1910 Alfred Lee built this one-and-a-half-story house at 1015 North 19th Street. The frame dwelling is of symmetrical design with a central gabled dormer on a side-facing gabled roof and multi-light windows. (1910) |
| 327. | 40K | 1102 North 19th Street
The residence at 1102 North 19th Street features a simple rectangular layout, a hipped roof with slightly flared eaves, a screened porch spanning the facade, and a central entry. The one-story house is of frame construction with stone foundation and shows Bungalow influence in its narrow siding, wide eaves with exposed rafters, and simple straightforward design. (1911) |
| 328. | 41K | 1106 North 19th Street
The one-and-a-half-story frame Bungalow at 1106 North 19th Street has a porch extending across the facade, which is recessed under the single street-facing gabled roof. Wide bracketed eaves and a shallow hipped-roof bay window on the right side are additional features of this house, built in 1910 by construction man A. H. Bain. (1910) |
| 329. | 42K | 1110 North 19th Street
The influence of the Bungalow style is seen in this one-and-a-half-story house at 1110 North 19th Street. A low hipped roof with central gabled dormer projects to shelter the facade-spanning porch. Wide eaves with exposed rafters and a flared base are additional Bungalow details. (1910) |
| 330. | 43K | 1116 North 19th Street
The house at 1116 North 19th Street displays an L-shaped plan with a wing to the left, intersecting gables, and an arched door in a brick entry section. A chimney is seen at the right side of the one-story frame residence built in 1941 by Lyle Ferney. (1941) |
| 331. | 45K | 1101 North 19th Street
The one-and-a-half-story brick and frame Bungalow at 1101 North 19th Street displays the double street-facing gables typical of the style, exposed rafters, and tapered porch pillars. The one-story frame Colonial Revival residence at 713 North 20th Street was built in 1922 by builder J. O. Jordan for Robert Mowbray Davidson. The symmetrical facade and central entry with pillared, gabled portico are typical of Jordan's buildings in this style. A flat-roofed wing is seen to the right, and a small wing projects at the rear left. (1922) |
| 345. | 47I | 801 North 20th Street
This large frame and stone two-story residence displays a low hipped roof, facade-spanning porch with right-of-center gabled pediment, and paired porch pillars. Henry and Mary Vernon built this substantial dwelling with box-like proportions in 1908. (1908) |
| 346. | 37B | 1670 Ada
The large two-and-a-half-story Colonial Revival house at 1670 Ada Street was built in 1915. A central entrance with pedimented portico, transom and side-lights, and engaged columns distinguishes the facade. A central gabled dormer intersects the low hipped roof. (1915) |
| 347. | 14I | 1715 Ada
The small one-story frame dwelling at 1715 Ada displays a hipped roof surmounted by a large gable, a right-of-center door with small gabled roof, and exposed rafters. This building was probably at one time the carriage house for 820 North 18th Street. (c. 1907) |
| 348. | 4B | 1529 Sherman
The Bungalow at 1519 Sherman displays a street-facing gable, horizontal bands of windows in the sun porch, exposed rafters, and a low roof line. The one-story frame house was built in 1921 by R. S. Coolbaugh of the Coolbaugh Coffee and Tea Company. (1921) |

| 357. | 15K | 1723 Eastman
1723 Eastman is the former United Presbyterian Church, built in 1911. The large frame structure has a main gabled sanctuary joined by a steeply gabled side entry. Handsome arched stained-glass windows are seen on three sides. Wide bracketed eaves are also a feature. (1911) |
| 358. | 20K | 1803 Eastman
The gabled roof sheltering the left-of-center porch is echoed by the main house roof in this one-and-a-half-story frame house built in 1903 by Andrew McQuaid. A large shed-roof dormer is seen at the left. All the eaves are trimmed with decorative barge boards and roof rafters which hint at a Bungalow influence, perhaps added in a later remodeling. (1904) |
| 359. | 26K | 1804 Eastman
The one-story frame cottage at the corner of 18th and Eastman was built by John and Carrie Pilmer in 1900. The complex roofline, wrap-around pillared porch with small decorative pediment, and bay windows show the Queen Anne influence. (1900) |
| 360. | 34K | 1817 Eastman
In 1898 the Francis Leonard family built this two-story frame house at 1817 Eastman. A porch with decorative shingles wraps around the residence to the left. A gabled bay with decorative eave returns projects to the right. (1898) |
| 361. | 23F | 1662 Irene
This one-story frame residence has a very steeply gabled entry bay which intersects the main roof gable, and a garage at the right roofed in a unique manner by a portion of the main roof sweeping down in a long, forward curve. (1938) |
| 362. | 29F | 1710 Irene
This large one-and-a-half-story stucco multiple dwelling features a large central shed-roof dormer which projects from the complex multi-faced hipped roof with flared eaves. A central entry porch with large windows projects below the dormer. (1920) |

proximity to the most elegant homes and chastizes the owners as "obstructionists" and "stumbling blocks to the progress of the city." (May 17, 1905, p.5, c.1.)

On the other hand, until about 1890 there were few signs of actual growth to match the local optimism that Boise would become more than a provisioning station for the gold fields of the Boise Basin. (Ibid.) When growth did finally occur in the 1890s it happened rapidly and the buildings of the new prosperity sprang up among existing structures, seeming to render them obsolete. In addition, a coherent city plan was never developed for streets, parks, or commercial and residential areas. This pattern of unplanned growth perhaps fitted the independent values of the pioneers, who were more interested in the expansion of their city than in strictly controlled development. As late as 1925, the Mayor declared that he and the City Council could do nothing if a landowner wished to build a gas station or mill on Harrison Boulevard; what a person did with his private property was his own affair. (Idaho Daily Statesman, March 25, 1925, p. 10, c. 1.)

The Harrison Boulevard District, then, reflects this unplanned laissez-faire approach to building as it grew through five decades. The District is also significant today as one of the few large areas still intact in which the buildings representative of Boise's developmental years remain as illustrations of the natural growth.

In general, the streets are quiet and tree lined and the neighborhoods look much as they did fifty years ago. Most blocks show at least two or three distinct architectural styles. Remarkably few of the buildings have seen significant alteration and modern structures are harmonious in scale. In spite of unrestricted growth, the area of the Harrison Boulevard Historic District remains solidly residential with no commercial enterprises within its boundaries.

In 1902 real estate man W. E. Pierce bought the property through which Harrison Boulevard runs today with the purpose of developing an exclusive residential area. As the Idaho Daily Statesman noted, "with deliberate intent they planted trees along the boulevard in such a manner that the width was set irrevocably at 80 feet, nearly twice the width of any other Boise street." (August 12, 1917, sec. 2, p. 1.) In an effort to ensure that houses of an appropriate scale were built, protective covenants were developed setting the minimum cost of residences on the boulevard at $1500.

The property owners on Harrison Boulevard were eager to improve their area and in 1911 were working with city officials to have the street paved and lighted and a landscaped parkway built down the center. Despite assurances from city engineers, by 1913 none of these projects had been undertaken and the residents formed the Harrison Boulevard Property Owners Association to expedite the plans. (Idaho Daily Statesman, April 24, 1911, p. 5, c. 3; August 12, 1917, sec. 2, p. 1.) It was not until 1916, however, that the first eight blocks of the boulevard (from Resseguie to the then city limits at Heron) received the long awaited parkway, lighting, and paving. In 1917 the Idaho Daily Statesman proudly and elaborately described the "elite thoroughfare" as one of the "finest in the West," although it was not to become the first of many such streets in Boise as originally predicted. (August 12, 1917, sec. 2, p. 1.) One major point of significance of the street lies in the fact that it exists today as the only street in the city with landscaping as part of its original conception. Indeed, Harrison Boulevard has been unique in this respect throughout its existence.

As discussed above, landscaping has been important in the Harrison Boulevard District from the first, and of additional interest is McAuley Park, which lies at the intersection of Harrison Boulevard, Resseguie Street, Hays Street, and 16th and 17th streets. An awkward intersection of these five streets was created at the point where the platted grid of the original town-site, which was oriented to the river, and the grid of the platted outlying areas, which followed the points of the compass, came together. The City Council pondered this dilemma of five streets which ended in a small odd-shaped vacant lot and finally decided that the solution was to build a small park. Trees, shrubs and flowers were planted and the park was named for Councilman Ernest H. McAuley, who had sponsored the project.

The other landscaping feature of significance is the large number of mature trees which line the streets. In 1910 the developers of the Highland Park area planted 3000 elms and maples along 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th streets. (Idaho Daily Statesman, March 20, 1910, p. 6, c. 1.) This foresightedness of the planners has resulted in the many trees which lend valuable support to Boise's claim to be a City of Trees in the southwest Idaho desert.

The growth of the district generally followed a trend of expansion from the Southeast to the Northwest along the north-south streets. The development and extension of trolley lines greatly influenced and enhanced the growth of the area. In the 1890s the trolley cars of the Boise Rapid Transit Company went north on 13th Street to Eastman and west to 17th Street. By 1901 the line had been extended north on 17th Street to the corner of Irene and previously remote farmlands were made accessible for "suburban" development. In 1907 the Boise Interurban Railway Company built a belt line which followed 15th Street north to Dewey, west to 18th Street, and down 18th Street to State Street. This important link with downtown spurred additional growth in the area and remained in operation until 1927.

The oldest portion of the district is the 16th Street area, with a large proportion of houses built between 1900 and 1910. As a result, the Queen Anne style can be seen as a major influence on the architecture of the street. For the most part, the dwellings are modest, one and a half stories in height, and of frame construction. The original owners of these unpretentious houses were often artisans, craftsmen, laborers, clerks, and small businessmen. Although there are hardly any houses on North 16th Street which could be considered elaborate and/or luxurious, an attempt to adapt some of the features of the Queen Anne to small dwellings can be seen in the flared eaves and multiple intersecting gables, small bay windows, and simple leaded glass and decorative porch railings. The overall effect is one of an attempt to add some small degree of grace and elegance to the simplest cottage, not by aping the wealthy, but by dignified adaptation of architectural forms.

The other influential style which is seen fairly frequently on 16th Street is the Bungalow. One notices the modest proportions of the houses and the use of the basic architectural elements of the style such as exposed rafters, tapered porch piers, and street-facing gables. The Bungalow, with its simple and straightforward design, lent itself readily to the unpretentious atmosphere of the street.

Another group of houses found on North 16th Street cannot be linked to any particular architectural style because of the extreme simplicity and lack of conscious architectural design. These buildings are significant, however, because they represent one of the most common forms of housing which served a large segment of the population of early Boise. The two most common forms are: (1) the one-story frame dwelling of square proportions, pyramidal roof, and central entry, perhaps with a small porch, and (2) the one-and-a-half-story frame house with high gabled roof facing the street, a front porch across the facade, and perhaps a side dormer. Almost complete absence of ornamentation characterizes these residences and indicates that the builders probably had little time or money to spend on the luxury of decoration. The majority of these very modest houses were built between 1898 and 1907.

Harrison Boulevard, by contrast, is dominated by the large, often elaborate houses of the well-to-do, although there are many unpretentious residences on the street as well. No one architectural style predominates, and the Boulevard catalogs the changing tastes of a growing community. Large, late Queen Anne residences sit side by side with Colonial Revival, Tudor Revival, Bungalow, Mission Revival, and Moderne houses. The grand proportions of some dwellings are not incongruous with smaller houses in the immediate vicinity, however. The wide tree-lined boulevard and well maintained houses and lawns lend an air of prosperity to the entire area.

It is difficult to discern a clear growth pattern for Harrison Boulevard itself. Most blocks have houses representing several different decades and reflecting the change in architectural styles. An exception to this is the 1000 block (west side) with a row of large two-and-a-half-story frame houses of similar design with box-like proportions, porches which extend the full length of the facade, and symmetrical layout and design. These particular residences were all built in 1909 and 1910 and the style is common throughout the district.

For the most part, there is a fairly even distribution of building dates all along the Boulevard with styles representative of forty years of building well mixed. It would be fair to say, however, that most of the very large residences are concentrated at the lower end of the street, close in to the city center, and that the majority of these were built before 1915.

West of Harrison Boulevard lies an area called Highland Park, which extends from Harrison to North 20th and north to Eastman Street. This area was originally developed around 1910 as an exclusive suburban community where protective covenants prohibited the building of homes which cost less than a set minimum fee. This minimum cost varied from $1500 to $5000, depending upon distance from the city center, and was intended to "ensure a general run of high class houses." (Idaho Daily Statesman, March 20, 1910, p. 6, c. 1.)

The residences in this area built during the initial development (c. 1910) are, consequently, large and spacious. They are generally constructed of stone, brick, and wood and are two or two and a half stories in height. There are a number of large handsome Bungalows, and another typical style found in this area is the box-like dwelling with facade-spanning porch, symmetrical layout and central dormer. The wide streets are lined with mature trees, due to the fact that the developers sought to improve their area by planting 3000 elms and maples in the Spring of 1910. (Idaho Daily Statesman, March 20, 1910, p. 6, c. 1.)

The Bungalow is also represented in Highland Park and in the district at large, with a great variety of dwellings in this versatile style. Early Bungalows are found among the substantial early houses of Highland Park, although the majority date from 1915 to 1925. As one progresses north on 17th, 18th, and 19th streets, Bungalows become more and more common and more modest in scale. The great adaptability of the Bungalow style is revealed in the tremendous variety of these dwellings, ranging from large half-timbered and stone houses to the simple rectangular frame form with a single gable facing the street. The low Bungalow roof may be a series of intersecting forms, pyramidal with cross gable, simple intersecting gables, or single gables; shed-roof dormers and bays are also frequently rearranged to create an endless variety of this functional type of house.

The Highland Park area seems to have grown steadily from the building of the first large dwellings (c. 1910) to the Bungalow period (approximately 1912-1925) and finally to the development in the late 1920s and early 1930s when many Tudor Revival and Mission Revival houses were built, particularly on 18th Street. For the most part, these Revival houses are medium size dwellings which use the basic elements to express their style affiliation and generally avoid a great deal of period detail.

Another shift can be seen as one progresses northward along 17th and 18th streets; the encroachment of the suburbs upon what was once agricultural land. Several of the small, vertical frame houses which were typical of small farm houses remain surrounded by Bungalows and Colonial Revival dwellings.

A small cluster of cast-stone houses remains on North 18th Street, a testimony to the experimentation with alternative building materials going on in the first decade of this century when the wood of the frontier town was being replaced by more substantial brick, stone, and concrete block. (Idaho Daily Statesman, May 11, 1905, p. 5, c. 1.) The cast stone, molded to look like cut sandstone or granite, was often used for the basement level, porch, or stoop. In the case of these three houses, it is used as the basic construction material for two small cottages and a large Bungalow, built between 1905 and 1911. At the north end of 17th Street in what was then farm and orchard land, another earlier group of brick cottages and houses is found. Brickyard owner Frank Foster built his own substantial residence at the corner of 17th and Irene streets in 1898. At the next corner, dairy farmer George Vaughn had architect J. E. Tourtelotte design a graceful, but unpretentious dwelling in the Queen Anne style. Between these two notable residences a small cluster of brick Queen Anne cottages was built within the next few years, after the trolley line was extended to 17th and Irene in 1901.

The Harrison Boulevard Historic District also has its share of architect-designed houses. Boise architect J. E. Tourtelotte is represented by a number of dwellings in a variety of styles. The G. W. Bond residence is an imposing example of the Mission Revival style and the Looney and Wyman residences are graceful and dignified examples of Tourtelotte's skill with the late Queen Anne style. The George Vaughn house at 17th and Dewey is a late Queen Anne dwelling designed by Tourtelotte which displays his ability to adapt the ornate forms of this style to a house of average size. The Craig Coffin house at 1021 Harrison Boulevard is another J. E. Tourtelotte design, with square, symmetrical proportions and a low hipped roof with wide eaves and exposed rafters which shows Bungalows influence. A slightly later Tourtelotte Bungalow is found at 1102 North 18th Street (1914) and shows all the hallmarks of that style combined with graceful geometric detail.

The firm of Nesbit & Paradise is represented by two residences in the Harrison District: the J. W. Oakes house at 1201 Harrison Boulevard in the Georgian Revival style and the T. K. Little house at 915 Harrison in a less pretentious Colonial Revival style. Wayland & Fennell, another of Boise's preeminent architectural firms, is represented by two Colonial Revival houses, the C. A. Carter residence at 907 Harrison and the Judge Richards dwelling at 1610 Harrison Boulevard.

Perhaps as important as the buildings of the Harrison Boulevard Historic District are the people linked with its growth. Many of Boise's influential citizens were the original subdividers and developers of the area; L. H. Cox, W. E. Pierce, Hortense Adams, John Lemp, and Jeremiah Brumback. D. W. Davis lived at 1505 Harrison Boulevard while he was Governor of Idaho because there was no official gubernatorial residence. Many merchants also had large residences on Harrison Boulevard, among them J. W. Oakes, Eugene Looney, R. S. Shaw, and S. E. Brookover. Mining men Mans Coffin and T. K. Little, stock-broker C. A. Carter, contractors J. A. Tertling and J. C. Jordan all added prestige to the area by living here. But Harrison Boulevard was by no means the exclusive domain of the wealthy and influential; the majority of the householders were members of the middle class, owning small businesses such as pharmacies, lumber companies, and machine shops, or were employed by larger firms. There was a good representation of professional people, too: lawyers, accountants, doctors, and engineers. The many more modest houses of the district were the homes of blue collar workers, laborers, and farmers (in the earlier days). Sixteenth Street, in particular, has a number of these simpler houses which are at the other end of the spectrum from the grand residences of Harrison Boulevard, but which were, nonetheless, just as representative of the life of the young city.

When establishing the district, consideration was given to drawing boundary lines at the points where the concentration of significant buildings drops sharply and threatens to compromise the district. In some cases this was difficult to do because of the "spotty" areas with several residences of architectural distinction among others which would be necessarily called intrusions; in these cases the boundary line was drawn conservatively. An attempt was made to include a solid, representative sampling of the architecture of the larger area known as the North End.

Intrusions are relatively few for a district this size and were usually designated as such because of extensive remodeling or recent date of construction. For the most part, intrusions are not of an incongruous scale and all are reasonably well maintained. Interest in preservation and restoration of buildings in the district is very high. The area is undergoing a renaissance, with owners going to great pains to restore older homes to their original appearance. Within the past ten years demand for houses in the area has boomed because of this interest in old dwellings. The process of nominating the Harrison Boulevard Historic District to the National Register of Historic Places has been a source of much interest and pride.
