DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Westland was built in 1854 by Commodore Robert F. Stockton and inhabited by Grover Cleveland from 1897 to 1908. The rectangular stone house is covered with stucco and is two and a half stories high, covered with a gable roof with a bracketed cornice, with four chimneys, centrally placed.

Cleveland was responsible for the construction of the two-story wing on the east side of the house. This wing has a flat roof and its own entrance, which in Cleveland's time, was sheltered by a small portico.

Although Westland is still employed as a private residence, many changes have been made both outside and within the house. The front facade retains the closest resemblance to the historic appearance. The facade is five bays wide, with four windows and a central doorway on the first floor, and five windows on the second floor. A single story portico, with a flat roof, with a dentillated cornice supported by four Doric columns, covers the central three bays of the first floor. The door in the center bay is flanked by sidelights, and topped with a transom light, all of which are framed by rounded pilasters supporting an entablature. Aside from the removal of the portico on the side wing, the front facade possesses the features of the historic period. On the west of the house, the open veranda has been removed and replaced by a one-story dependency. The roof, which was covered with sheet metal during Cleveland's occupancy, is now shingled with asbestos tiles; and the Gothic or Italianate arcade which enclosed the four chimneys has been removed, leaving the chimneys freestanding.

Inside the house, only the two front rooms have retained an historic appearance. The interior is characterized by the high-ceilinged and spacious rooms. The first floor of the wing is no longer used as the billiard room, as it was in Cleveland's time. There are no Cleveland furnishings in the house.

The grounds are maintained in garden and lawn, as in the historic period, although the house was originally on a larger plot of ground. There is a modern swimming pool on the grounds. Westland presently retains only the facade of the house inhabited by Cleveland. During Cleveland's occupancy, the house was added on to in the rear (north). Servants' quarters and stables formed an extension which reached all the way to Cleveland Lane. In 1950 the central portion of this wing was removed, and Westland received a new rear face. The northern portion of the wing was converted from a carriage house into a separate house, which faces on Cleveland Lane. The middle area is divided by a brick wall.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Grover Cleveland's earnestness and incorruptibility impressed his contemporaries even more than his girth did. Those qualities continue to characterize his two presidential terms, his best biographer describing the man's career as "an example of courage that never yields an inch in the cause of truth, and that never surrenders an iota of principle to expedience." ¹

Upon leaving Washington in 1897, after serving his second term in the Presidency, Cleveland settled at "Westland," Princeton, New Jersey, where he enjoyed 11 years of retirement, before his death on June 24, 1908. The two-and-a half story, stuccoed stone house appears much the same today as it did during Cleveland's occupancy. It is privately owned.

Biography:

Before settling in Buffalo, New York, Cleveland experienced an almost Bedouin-like existence. Born in Caldwell, New Jersey, on March 18, 1837, his father a Presbyterian minister, moved to Fayetteville, New York, in 1841. Here Cleveland began his schooling, but in 1850 he and his family moved to Clinton, where they lived for two and a half years. In 1852, the Clevelands moved to Holland Patent, near Utica. Three years later, the future president began to work in Buffalo.

The frequent moves impaired Cleveland in no way, and he achieved fame and power in Buffalo. He became a lawyer and a politician. After holding several offices, he was elected mayor in 1881. Honesty personified, he banished graft and initiated reform. His achievements in Buffalo won favor throughout New York, and he was elected governor in 1882.

Characteristics other than that of brilliance enabled Cleveland to gain the ultimate American political success. Courageous and honest, he also persevered. Once he adopted a course, he followed it to its logical end. Furthermore, he knew men, discerning dedication in one and opportunism in another with equal ease.

The Democratic Party, apprised of Cleveland's popularity, chose him as their standard bearer in 1884, 1888, and 1892. He won in 1884 and 1892. While president, Cleveland generally eschewed the unusual as he pursued precedent in both domestic and foreign policy. Nevertheless, his bold plea for tariff reform in his message to Congress in 1887 and his strong condemnation of American imperialistic tendencies during his two terms indicate the sincerity and morality that pervaded his actions as president.

CONTINUATION SHEET

ITEM NUMBER 8 PAGE 1

Cleveland, upon leaving Washington in 1897, established his residence at "Westland," Princeton, New Jersey. He lived there until his death on June 24, 1908.

The Clevelands purchased a house in Princeton because they had decided before leaving the White House that they wanted to live in that college community. Mrs. Cleveland apparently selected the house, but the president named it, honoring his great friend at Princeton University, Professor Andrew F. West.

Cleveland enjoyed his retirement immensely. He assumed, with pleasure, an active role in the college, carried on an active correspondence with friends, and engaged in a stimulating social life. He perhaps felt more at home in Princeton than he had in any other house he had occupied.

"Westland," with its spacious, high ceiled rooms, is essentially the same as Cleveland left it. There are no Cleveland furnishings in the house.
