DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located in the Pee Dee Region of South Carolina, the town of Marion serves as the county seat for Marion County. A growing town, it currently has a population of approximately 7,500. Tradition states that at the site of Marion was an old Indian trading post located at the intersection of two trails near the present Main and Godbold Streets; four acres of land given to the county for public buildings in 1798 became the nucleus of the village. The two trails then divided the public square into four one-acre plots. These squares are now grass-covered areas, shaded by trees and planted with azaleas and camellias. The Courthouse and the Records Building are the only buildings on these plots, but early deeds referring to lots and buildings "according to the Village Plan" indicate a system of early planning with stores, meeting houses, and homes built around the square. Many of these original buildings stand today, altered slightly to meet the demands of repair and convenience. Moss-hung oaks and elms, interspersed with dogwoods, line the streets along which are old homes and buildings representing various styles of 19th and early 20th Century architecture.

In 1973 the Marion Historic District was entered in the National Register of Historic Places. The area consisted of approximately 74 acres and was comprised of a portion of the City of Marion lying south and southeast of the central business district. The majority of the original historic district is residential, but also included is the historically and architecturally important public square.

Key buildings contributing to the character of the original historic district:

- A. Courthouse--Public Square (1853)--style adapted from Georgian with influence of Robert Mills. Square rusticated pillars support the four Doric columns and pediment. Structure painted grey with quoins and pillars in charcoal grey. Wrought-iron stairs lead to the courtroom portico. Woven into the design of each step is name of metal worker "Hayward Bartlett Baltimore." Courtroom contains original pews. Third courthouse to be built on square.
- B. The Records Building--Public Square (c. 1903)-- typical turn-of-the century construction. Style modified and adapted from late Romanesque revival. Red brick, simplified Romanesque tower and wrought iron at the arches, swept dormer ventilators in fireproof metal roof.
- C. The Opera House and Town Hall--109 West Godbold Street (1892)--two-story brick (common bond) structure located behind southwest square. Simple in design. Radial design louvers are present in each of four gables. Wooden false dormers on front and back are superimposed on low gabled roof. Much of original wainscoting and woodwork remains. First floor housed courtroom, jail, and fire department. Second floor served public speakings, graduation exercises, and theatrical productions. Present owner, Pee Dee Motor Company, has altered interior and installed showroom windows in lefthand corner of lower floor.
- D. Confederate Monument--located in center of southeast square--originally located on Main and Godbold Streets. Dedicated October 1903. Monument with cast bronze Confederate soldier by American Bronze Foundry Company, Chicago.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

As both a county seat and as a railroad town, Marion has been important to the growth of South Carolina's Pee Dee region. Rich in political and military tradition, Marion has produced outstanding individuals who have served both the community and state. Marion has also been noted as a cultural and educational center for the Pee Dee, and as a statewide leader in community beautification. Marion was officially established in the Act of 1798 as a judicial district. The first court was held in 1800, and the community developed around this center of activity.

As originally established, the Marion Historic District included structures which reflect the town's architectural, educational, political and military heritage. Since that time, a two-phased study and preservation plan for Marion has recognized additional residential and commercial areas having historical and architectural merit and which reflect the town's growth during the late 19th Century. During its first fifty-five years, Marion remained a small town. Although the completion of the railroad in 1854 resulted in Marion's expansion, this upsurge was halted by the War Between the States and the ensuing Reconstruction period. Hence, it was not until the late 19th Century that the town underwent much growth and commercial activity. In 1900 it was recorded:

The improvements since 1876 have been gradual, up to a few years back, when a new impetus was given her, and she is now on a boom; her population is about 2,000. Instead of bar-rooms, we have two flourishing banks, a cotton factory, an oil mill, an iron foundry...and this is not all, the old wooden shanties for dwellings and stores are being replaced by large and commodious buildings for dwellings - some of wood and brick....<sup>1</sup>

The increasing prosperity of the town during the late 19th and early 20th century was reflected in the architecture of the homes in the newly developed areas of Willcox Avenue and Harllee Street. Main Street with its 19th and early 20th century vernacular commercial structures is also a reminder of the architectural and economic status of that period of growth. It is these areas which are being included within the expanded district. Combined with the areas previously in the historic district, they together reflect the growth of Marion from a small courthouse town into a commercial center for the Pee Dee Region of South Carolina.

Architecture: Marion is an area representative of the various styles of 19th Century architecture. In evidence are the early frame structures of the 1800s, the antebellum houses with Greek Revival porticoes, the raised cottage style typical of the Pee Dee, and the Victorian homes of the turn of the century. There is, however, a sense of architectural unity throughout the town and a continuity of design which identifies this as an historic district.

ITEM NUMBER 7 PAGE 1

E. Marion Public Library--Court Street, faces southeast square (1905)--Rectangular building of red brick laid in Flemish bond. Greek revival influence in recessed portico with Ionic columns. Double sash windows with thirty-two triangular panes. Deep dentil cornice. Restored after fire damaged interior in 1929.

F. McIntyre House--100 East Court Street, adjacent to Northeast square, (1830s). Originally raised cottage style with curving stairs up to porch, extensively remodeled in 1922.

G. Durham House--107 East Dozier Street, adjacent to northeast square, (c. 1804). Possibly oldest house in Marion. Original four room frame structure was remodeled in 1870. Additions included upper story, two bay windows, double porch with brackets and gingerbread. Kitchen and pantry wing also added.

H. Masonic Hall--203 East Godbold Street (1822) altered in early 1960s, but original structure retained. Entrance doors have original locks and keys. Main floor is frame with gable roof with projecting pedimented portico. Four unfluted Doric columns are supported by square stuccoed red brick piers. Steps (now enclosed) lead from the ground to main floor. Ground floor walls are brick.

I. Town Cemetery--Directly behind Methodist church on corner of Arch and Oak streets. Used as town cemetery until 1886. Markers date from 1830s. Descriptions in early deeds refer to public burying ground with brick wall.

J. W. J. Montgomery House--408 Harlee Street (1893)--Modified Eastlake, two-story red brick structure with gabled roofline and tower partially covered with imbricated shingles. Jigsaw brackets on front posts and supporting fretwork at the eaves make the balustrade ornamentation. Entrance hall has double arches and cross halls at midpoint. High ceilinged rooms have carved woodwork and trim of natural pine. Structure is set in small park-like area with boxwood. Original dependency in rear.

K. Young-Johnson House--502 East Godbold Street (c. 1850)--Typical low-country raised cottage exemplifying both West Indian style and Greek Revival influence. Broken roofline and large sweeping piazza are supported by six Doric columns independent of porch. Double rooms open to either side of entrance hall, which leads into sitting room at rear of structure. Fine paneled woodwork, high medallioned ceilings, massive doors, and locks characterize structure.

L. Church of the Advent--307 South Main Street, organized in 1867--Cornerstone laid in April, 1880. Small modified gothic structure originally of wood; brick veneered in 1928.

M. McDonald-Price House--403 South Main Street, (c. 1850)--Modified up-country Greek revival cottage shows evidence of West Indian style popular in 1840s. Side walls are clapboard with porch wall in shiplap. Structure has wide porch and freestanding columns supporting roof. Pegged mantles and oversized beams indicate early construction. Wing added in early 1900s. Restoration and some alteration in 1948.

N. Methodist District Parsonage--109 West Baptist Street (1850s)--One-story Greek revival frame house with portico supported by four freestanding square paneled columns. Windows are 9/9 double sash. Front entrance has cornice double paneled doors with side lights. Recessed porch located at rear of structure. Interior has wide entrance hall dividing four square rooms and extending into back wing. Mantels and window trim show carved details. Small original dependency in side yard.

O. Major Ferdinand Gibson House--201 Presbyterian Street (c. 1840)--Greek revival frame structure has two story portico each floor of which is supported by four square columns. Interior has four square rooms on each floor divided by wide hall. Living room has columned mantel of black Italian marble. Only dependency remaining is kitchen, which was added to the house in 1883. Gardens and grove of trees surround house.

P. Presbyterian Church--South Main Street, (1852)--Oldest church still standing in town. Typical frame meeting house of mid-19th Century, showing strong Greek Revival influence. Four Doric columns support portico. Semi-circular fanlight tops double doors of front entrance. Octagonal belfry is located directly above portico. Most window glass is original, triple sash 6/9/9. Interior has louvered shutters in natural wood corresponding to beaded three-inch-wide wainscoting and coved ceiling made of three-inch boards with added trim to finish design. New pews and 12-foot extensions at rear were added in 1913 and slave gallery removed.

Q. Marion Academy-Marion Graded School--101 Willcox Avenue (1886)--Two-story structure of red brick laid in common bond. Porch supported by columns. Gabled roof. Double doors flanked by sidelights and transom. Still used as school building. Remodeled circa 1920 and 1950.

As a result of the listing of the above-described area in the National Register of Historic Places, the City of Marion provided funds for an Historic Preservation Plan. This plan was also funded by a 50% Department of the Interior matching grant-in-aid, through the South Carolina Department of Archives and History. However, in 1977 when the first phase of this plan was completed, approximately 38 of the town's most architecturally or historically important structures were identified as being outside the boundaries of the historic district. Consequently, it was recommended that the district boundaries be enlarged to include the majority of the key structures. Additionally, the second phase of the plan focused on the central business district and noted its visual continuity and unity in terms of height, scale and setback. It pointed out that the majority of the commercial buildings were brick, one or two stories high, and situated along the sidewalk with no setback. It was also noted that several structures within the central business district received the highest architectural evaluation.

Consequently, the boundaries of the Marion Historic District have been enlarged to include both commercial and residential structures having both historical and architectural value. This expanded area is located at the northern end of the original historic district and primarily consists of the central business district (Main Street), and residential areas containing several notable Victorian residences. The expanded area conforms to the original historic district in that residences are primarily wooden and one or two stories high. The ubiquitous tree-lined streets are also found in the expanded area. Finally, it should also be noted that because Marion is a growing town, its historic district is presently experiencing the pressures of many urban areas, including shopping centers and outlying development. The City of Marion, aware of these pressures, not only provided 50% of the funds for the Preservation Plan, it recently allocated funds for the first stages of the implementation of that plan. Additionally, several store owners are following the plan's recommendations for painting and "fix-up".

Some of the key structures contributing to the character of the expanded historic district:

1. 212 Willcox Avenue - 1889. One-story clapboard with gable roof. Well-proportioned Victorian cottage with carved brackets. See photograph # 2.
2. 301 Willcox Avenue - 1886. Victorian, wood siding and shingle facade. Two and one-half stories with gable roof. Front gable with colored glass window, turned columns and balusters. Porches. See photograph # 3.
3. 302 Willcox Avenue - 1880. One story Victorian cottage. Clapboard, gable roof, asymmetrical front wings with recessed entry porch; side porch, turned columns and balusters.
4. 311 Willcox Avenue - 1893. Queen Ann Style, two and one-half stories, wood siding. Turret with conical roof, rounded porch with ball and spindle decor, 2-story side bay, chimneys with recessed panels. See photograph # 4.
5. 403 Willcox Avenue - Circa 1901. Queen Anne, two and one-half stories, wood siding, one-story porch, shingles in end gables, decorative woodwork on cornices, "sunburst" panel under front windows, chimneys with decorative patterns. See photograph # 5.
6. Smith Brothers Funeral Home - 507 Willcox Avenue - (c. 1895). Victorian, two-story brick with hipped roof. Victorian turned work on 1st floor porch, notable brick work (especially chimneys with corbelled panels), corner turret. See photograph # 6.

The expanded area aptly reflects Marion's architectural heritage, since Victorian is the town's dominant architectural period. Excellent examples of the Queen Anne style include 403 Willcox Avenue, 311 Willcox Avenue, and the Smith Brothers Funeral Home, 507 Willcox Avenue. Other Victorian structures include 405 Harllee and 309 Harllee. The houses located at 212 Willcox and 319 Harllee are fine examples of cottages with Victorian influences. Late 19th century and early 20th Century vernacular houses are also well represented within the expanded district.

The commercial structures of the business district present varied architectural styles. The Professional Pharmacy (223 N. Main) and G. A. McIntyre (417 N. Main) are fine examples of pressed metal facades. Pope's (308 N. Main) and Horinbein's (329 N. Main) have notable masonry facades. Throughout the commercial area, recessed masonry panels, corbelled brick cornices and parapets are common features which provide visual continuity.

Education: The Marion library was the first tax-supported library in South Carolina. Although Mills' Statistics noted a library organization in 1826, it was not until 1898 that one was chartered in Marion.

The Marion Academy Society was founded before 1814. During the War Between the States, part of the academy was destroyed by fire, and out of necessity, classes were held in the Masonic Hall until 1886, when the present school was constructed. The Academy became the first complete graded school in Old Marion District.

Landscape Architecture/Community Planning: There are many evidences of an early awareness on the part of the citizens for the need for community planning. The organization of the Civic Improvement League in the 1890s resulted in a beautification program for the town. Through the National Park Association, a landscape architect, Harlan P. Kelsey of Kelsey and Guild, L.A. of Boston was obtained. He drew up a "Planting Plan of Public Square" for Marion. The area was thus converted from a horse lot into a park. Its quiet beauty remains a source of pride for the Marion community.

In 1900, the Marion Business League, established to promote economic growth, stimulated the industrialization of the area. The enterprising citizens paid dues, contributed funds and met regularly to develop plans.

The quality of the editorial policy and reporting of The Marion Star (1848) under the guidance of E. C. Coker added a new dimension to community awareness and progressive thinking. The public was prodded, informed and encouraged to develop its economic and cultural resources.

Military: Marion was named for the Revolutionary War hero, Gen. Francis Marion. His camp was on Snow's Island and hidden in the recesses of the Big Pee Dee River, a western boundary of Marion County. Gregg's History of the Cheraws states "The name was appropriately given as in that region under Marion the struggle for liberty on the Pee Dee was chiefly waged." Soldiers from Marion, such as Col. Hugh Giles, Col. William Baker, and Capt. John Dozier served under Gen. Marion.

Military tradition has been a strong force in Marion's history. Before 1833 Marion District was represented in the state militia by both Brigadier and Major Generals. During the War Between the States General N. G. Evans, a native of Marion and a West Point Graduate, was appointed a Brigadier General in the Confederate Forces by Jefferson Davis. Reverend J. E. Dunlop served on the staff of both General N. B. Forrest and General N. W. Gary. Known as "The Fighting Parson of the Confederacy," Rev. Dunlop was minister of Marion Presbyterian Church after the war.

Political: Throughout its history Marion has produced able citizens willing to participate in the affairs of government. Among these are W. H. Ellerbe, Governor of South Carolina (1896-1899) and William Wallace Harllee President pro tem of the S. C. Senate and Lt. Governor of the state. General Harlee, Chesly P. Evans, and Major W. P. Rowell attended the Secession Convention of 1860 and were signers of the Ordinance of Secession.

Theatre: Built in 1892 the Old Town Hall and Opera House was Marion's cultural center. Traveling theatrical companies or "road shows" performed there as well as local talent. Walls of the Opera House carry many names of the casts.

Transportation: William Wallace Harllee was a key promoter of the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad (later Atlantic Coast Line) and served as its first president. Colonel William S. Mullins, also of Marion County, succeeded him. As a result of the completion of the railroad in 1854, Marion experienced a period of growth which, although temporarily halted by the War Between the States, lasted through the early 20th Century. The 1908 railroad depot is included within the expanded boundaries of the historic district.
