The Masonic Temple in Lincoln, Lancaster County, Nebraska is a 3-story, Silverdale limestone meeting hall built in 1934-35 by the well-known Lincoln architectural firm of Meginnis and Schaumberg and contractor Charles Olson. The building is built for just under $125,000 in a restrained version of the Art Deco style. Besides the installation of new windows, which have minimal impact on the overall appearance, the building has the same physical attributes today as when it was completed and retains especially significant interior features.

The Masonic Temple in Lincoln, Lancaster County, Nebraska is a 3-story, Silverdale limestone meeting hall built in 1934-35 by the well-known Lincoln architectural firm of Meginnis and Schaumberg. The building is built in a restrained version of the Art Deco style. The Kansas limestone offers a pale peach-yellow tone to the 78 by 112 foot structure in contrast its lush, green front lawns. The building is situated behind two mature oak trees on the prominent southwest corner of 17th and L Streets. The temple has a granite water table as its base. The first exterior level of limestone facade is distinguished from the bare second with a banded rustication of the limestone and is punctured with a row of simple recessed windows. This style is similar to the most prominent art deco building in Lincoln, the Nebraska State Capital (NL), which was finished just 3 years before the Masonic Temple. This banded rustication with bare limestone above was replicated again by the architects in their 1936 remodel of the Little Building (LC13C9-048) at 11th and O Streets. The windows have been modified from the original windows of 1935, as the new windows are fully glazed single lites instead of the common divided lite glazing of the era. This modification has minimal impact on the overall appearance of the building because the windows are deeply recessed. Separating the first and second floors of the building is a decorative, carved stone band predominantly displaying the Masonic star in repetition around the three finished facades of the building. The North facing facade of the building is dominated by the front entrance, centered between the row of first floor recessed windows and crowned by a classical pediment that contains the radiating eye of the Masons. Three low steps rise from the sidewalk to three heavy wood doors, which are framed by a stone casing adorned by the Masonic star and a transom of etched glass panels. Above the entrance and just below the pediment is a carving from a sketch by artist Elizabeth Dolan. The carving is representative of the Masonic order's work, in three figures suggesting youth, manhood, and old age. At top of the facade, the Masonic compass is placed in repetition around the three finished facades of the building.

The main entrance accesses a small vestibule that leads to the main corridor. A mural, entitled "The High Hills and Low Vales" again by Elizabeth Dolan, depicts the early meeting places of the Masons. The floors are terrazzo and the walls are wainscoted with Montana produced travertine marble with textured plaster above. The appearance and condition of the hallway displays a high degree of integrity from when the Temple opened in 1935. The vaulted ceiling is marked with arches and capitals, completing an dignified passageway to the most important rooms in the Temple. The lounge which now acts as the library, is east of the central entrance and is decorated in English oak paneling. It is rich and dark toned as is most of the woodwork in the Temple.

On the south side of the main floor is the dining room, 80 feet by 47 feet, with a capacity of 400 people. The room has a colored ceiling of geometric reds and blues placed between broad cross beams in the Art Deco style. These stenciled geometric patterns have been used to decorate a ceiling that would otherwise be very bare and structural.

A discrete elevator has been added to access the second floor meeting rooms. The staircase leads to the large, second floor lobby, which maintains the travertine marble and textured plaster of the first floor corridor. On opposite sides of this hallway lie the service and preparation rooms for lodge meetings. These include dressing rooms, a coat check room and telephone room.

To the east of the second floor lobby is the small lodge room. This 27 by 52 foot, Doric influenced room is dominated by the nine murals done by Elizabeth Dolan. Dolan's work can also be seen at Morrill Hall at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, the library at the State Capitol and the Lincoln YWCA. Dolan's work is characterized by her almost sketch-like style of painting. The north wall has five murals, beginning in the west corner with Jacob's Dream, followed by St. John the Evangelist writing the Revelations, Moses and the Burning Bush, The Sepulcher, and St. John the Baptist in the Wilderness. The south wall continues with Sir Galahad searching for the Holy Grail, King Solomon with King Hiram of Tyre, Jeremiah the Prophet and the Wicked King Hezekiah and then returning to Sir Galahad when he finds the Holy Grail. Dolan brings her murals to life with subtle use of darker hues in contrast to soft yellow and peach tones. The murals work together to create the central theme. These nine paintings are well-crafted interpretations of the symbols of Masonry. The murals themselves are recessed into light beige masonry walls in between pilasters that lead to a sculptured wreath above. The wreath is detailed with Masonic symbolism including the bee hive, the hour glass, the star and other attributes. Indirect lighting floods the ceiling above from behind the wreath, giving the room a grand and luminous effect The floor is covered with a plush green carpet, there is dark woodwork, and red leather benches surround the room's outer edges.

To the west of the lobby and preceding the entrance to the large lodge room is the upstairs lounge, measuring 24 feet by 26 feet. The lounge has high, white, beamed ceilings that add to the chocolate brown walls and narrow, square mahogany paneled wainscoting. The large lodge room occupies most of the south portion of the second floor. The entrance is framed by two ornate wood columns, capped with globes that represent the celestial and terrestrial spheres. The room, measuring an imposing 71 feet by 47 feet, is enclosed by soaring, elaborate Roman Ionic columns. The columns, colored in a light green hue, break up the stone textured exterior walls that lead to the high coffered ceiling of this grand room. The space created is filled with excellent mahogany woodwork, including the tables, benches and other furnishings brought from the previous Temple. Overall, the Masonic Temple retains a high degree of integrity of significant exterior and interior features.

The Masonic Temple is locally significant in the area of architecture as one of Lincoln's most complete Art Deco style buildings constructed by a local master builder. The Temple stands out in it's restrained but total commitment to the style best illustrated by it's cubic massing and geometric ornamentation. The decor of the Temple is also locally significant on the basis of the high artistic value of the murals by the local Nebraska artist Elizabeth Dolan.

An example of Art Deco in Lincoln

The Masonic Temple was built in 1934-35, for approximately $125,000 as a modern, Art Deco style building to hold the meetings of the three local Lincoln lodges of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and the York Rite Masons. The architects of the Masonic Temple were Meginnis (Harry) and Schaumberg, (Edw. G) a prominent local firm, who also designed the Art Deco remodel of the Little Building (LC13-C9-048, NRHP 1988) in 1936, as well as the Federal Trust Building (LC13-C08-007, NRHP 2001-2) and the Y.W.C.A. (LC13-D08-018, NRHP 1984). Meginnis and Schaumberg worked in Lincoln as partners from 1926 to 1942.

Lincoln has a mere handful of Art Deco style buildings, which are generally of small scale and modest decoration. The two-story Umion Bus Depot (300 S. 13th, ca. 1930, Davis and Wilson), with chevron decorated spandrels; and the one story Skelly Gas Station and Safeway Grocery Store (2600 and 2620 "O" Street, 1936 and 1937, Jesse B. Miller), with narrow, carved linestone friezes and decorated marquees, are characteristic of the scale and ornamentation found locally. The three-story Phi Delta Theta Fraternity House (1545 "R" Street, 1937, M.I. Aitken) was listed on the NRHP in 1986 for its local architectural significance. That limestone-clad building is most noteworthy for its cubic massing and curved, glass block corner. The two-story Christian Record Building (3705 S 48th St, F3-113, Felix A. Lorenz) was listed in 1986 primarily for social/humanitarian significance, although it also has local architectural significance as the Art Deco work of a builder/designer. The only other tall office building besides the before mentioned Little Building with Art Deco elements is the Stuart Building (NRHP 2003, 13th and "P", C9-3, 1927, Davis and Wilson), which combines stepped massing and fluted spandrels with considerable Gothic style trim.

The cubic massing and geometric decor of the exterior of the Temple is the best illustration of the of the building's Art Deco style architecture. The construction date of 1934-35 is significant as a midpoint of the style's popularity in Lincoln and a indicator of the architectural influence on the city by the recently completed State Capitol. The Temple stands at the southwest corner of 17th and L Streets as a perfect 78 foot by 112 foot rectangle block of Kansas limestone. Recessed windows puncture the banded rustication of limestone on the first floor as the second and third floors are presented as one large mass with geometric friezes on the top and bottom. The geometric friezes contain Masonic symbology, an unusual interpretation of a common Art Deco design feature. The frieze separating the first floor from the rest of the building is a simple banding predominantly displaying the Masonic star in repetition around the three finished facades of the building. At the crown of the flat roofed building is the Masonic compass, placed in repetition as a frieze around the three finished facades. Another illustration of the temple's Art Deco style is the front entrance of the building itself. Crowned by a classical Greek pediment that contains the radiating eye of the Masons, the entry is centered between the row of first floor recessed windows and dominates the north facade. Below the pediment is a bas relief representing the Masonic Order's work that is based on a sketch by Elizabeth Dolan. This geometric massing and decor is similar to the Nebraska State Capital, a Art Deco masterpiece by Bertram Goodhue, completed only three years before and just a few blocks to the south and west of the Temple.

A master muralist on display

Elizabeth Honor Dolan (1884?-1948) is best known for the background murals in Elephant Hall at the University of Nebraska's Morrill Hall. Primarily a commercial artist, Dolan also executed murals in Lincoln's Masonic Temple, State Capitol, Y.W.C.A. and Bennett Martin public library. Well trained in the academic tradition, Dolan was more successful receiving commissions as a decorative illustrator and muralist rather than a conventional artist.

A native of Fort Dodge, Iowa, Dolan moved as a child with her mother and sister to Tecumseh, Nebraska, and later to Lincoln. She attended the University of Nebraska in 1903-04, studying under Sarah Hayden. Dolan later attended the Chicago Art Institute, the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris and institutions in Italy. She lived in New York during the late 1910's and early '20s, and seems to have divided her time between New York and Nebraska throughout the 1930s. Later she returned to Lincoln, where she died in 1948.

Previous to her commission for the Temple, Miss Dolan completed a mural in the Law Library of the Nebraska State Capitol. Her collaboration with the Temple is a continuation of a marriage of her inuralist artwork with the most popular style of monumental architecture of the era. Although not readily accessible to the public, Dolan's murals for the Masonic Temple combine individual paintings into a single coherent decorative scheme. The panels line the two long walls of the temple's small meeting room. Her paintings incorporate Biblical subjects with those drawn from the Knights of the Round Table. Each panel depicts several large figures set against a vague background, and include Solomon, John the Baptist and Sir Galahad. Another example of the Temple's Art Deco style is the bas relief sculpture based on a sketch of Miss Dolan's, which is above the main entrance of the Temple.

Unfortunately for the city of Lincoln, some of Dolan's murals have been lost or painted over. A 1930s work at the University Club on the top floor of the Stuart Building disappeared in a remodeling, and a mural done in 1930 at the Unitarian Church was lost when the church moved locations. Even one of her works at Elephant Hall was covered up, although not destroyed.

The Masonic Temple in Lincoln is a dignified example of the union of art and architecture, more dramatically displayed by the nearby State Capitol, with an exceptional degree of integrity.
