Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The John Spring Neighborhood Historic District consists of the historically preserved and architecturally significant core of the John Spring Multiple Resource Area, a historic residential neighborhood one mile north of the original city center of Tucson, Arizona. The historic district is about 75 acres in extent and spans a time period of 1896-1939. Nominated buildings range over most of Tucson's local, transitional, and imported historic styles. These include Sonoran adobe forms, adaptations of these forms with Anglo roof technology, trim, and lot placement; and Gothic and Tudor revivals, as well as later Mission and Spanish Colonial revivals, Bungalows, and single examples of Prairie Style and Moderne.

Three visually distinct regions within the district differ in average age and prevailing style. The original settlement (circa 1900), south of West University Boulevard, has small turn-of-century streetscapes. Sonoran adobe houses at zero lot-line interspersed with two Gothic Revival churches, several Queen Anne buildings, and Anglo-influenced early adobe homesteads. Two blocks of ornate streetlamps along West Fifth Street are included. There is a section of later-dated Bungalows and Revival residences, and one former tourist court. Some deteriorated structures and modern intrusions are present. The Bungalow development (circa 1920), north of West University, with few non-contributing elements, contains several intact blocks of small, stylistically diverse Bungalow and Spanish-inspired revival homes. The church-and-school-square (1913 and 1918, with later additions) is an open, plaza-like block containing the neighborhood's showpiece Mission Revival church and its namesake school. Except in this block, the uniform street grid of the neighborhood is varied by residential development along north-south alleys or half-width streets between the full-width streets. Throughout the neighborhood are six historic grocery stores, one still operating. All parts of the district are visually unified by the street grid; prevailing landscaping of tamarisk, chinaberry, and palms; and a mostly one-story housing fabric. Several buildings within the district have recently been rehabilitated or adapted for re-use. The neighborhood association has re-roofed low income, owner-occupied houses using federal block-grant monies. Roofing material was approved for appearance by the Arizona Historic Preservation Office.

The district boundary is drawn as an irregular line where land use shifts from residential to recent commercial, and levels of historic architectural integrity drop correspondingly. From North Main Avenue, the boundary runs north of West Second Street; east to North Tenth Avenue; then south of West Speedway Boulevard to a point west of North Stone Avenue; then southward to a point north of West Sixth Street; then north of West Sixth and the railroad alignment, back to the east side of North Main.

The district contains 234 resources. One hundred ninety-three (193), or about 82 per cent, have been deemed contributing; forty-one (41), or about 18 per cent, noncontributing. These judgments are based on two historic and architectural surveys (John Spring and Aviation Corridor) which, between them, covered the John Spring Multiple Resource Area. The surveys made use of standard forms supplied by the Arizona State Historic Preservation Office to record field observation and measurement, architectural evaluation, and historic associations of each site. The associations were determined by research into archival sources and by interviews. Photographs and ownership data accompany each form. A site map and final report are based on data from these forms.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

Summary

The John Spring Neighborhood Historic District is the main resource within the John Spring Multiple Resource Area. The district represents the core of historic architectural integrity, 1896-1939, within this early Tucson residential area. The district is eligible for the National Register under: Criterion A, for its association with the settlement/urbanization of Tucson, for its unique association with the social/ethnic heritage of Tucson, and for its association with the suburbanization of Tucson; and Criterion C, for its cohesive collection of architectural styles reflecting major trends of Tucson's social and ethnic development during a formative historic period.

Each area of significance for the district has been developed in Item 8 of the Multiple Resource Area form, submitted as a separate part of this nomination. The following paragraphs briefly summarize the areas of significance of the John Spring Neighborhood Historic District.

Settlement Significance: Residential Character and Urbanization

The district reflects Tucson's expanding population and social changes after the economy shifted from local to national in the 1870s and 1880s. The neighborhood's primary settlement significance derives from its location between Anglo and Hispanic residential zones at a period when Anglo dominance was being consolidated. As a settlement area, John Spring initially was the pivot on which Tucson's urbanization process turned east toward the new University of Arizona campus, symbol of Anglo influence and values. The neighborhood expansion during the 1910s marked the boom which Tucson experienced as a direct result of World War I. These factors influenced the area's demography and form until at least 1930. By this date, its boundaries were being closed by increased traffic and changed land use on all sides of the neighborhood. Thus, the district's demography and form closely reflect important changes in Tucson's development from the turn of the century through the end of the historic period (1939).

Social/Ethnic Significance: The Development of Ethnic Pluralism

As Tucson's economy shifted from local to national in the late nineteenth century, cultural dominance was transferred from earlier Hispanic settlers to Anglo newcomers and, generally, the two ethnic groups began to live in different parts of town. The John Spring Neighborhood Historic District is significant because it straddled this ethnic border or frontier. The area became unique for its mix of ethnic groups beyond that found in other historic Tucson neighborhoods. Tucson's theme of ethnic pluralism defined the John Spring neighborhood from its beginnings; Hispanics, Anglos, blacks, Chinese, and occasionally Yaquis lived there for some 85 years. Most significantly, the district provided a haven of development for both the Hispanic and black middle classes.

National Park Service

National Register of Historic Places Continuation Sheet

Suburbanization Significance:

The John Spring Neighborhood Historic District is significant because the growth of its residential area and supporting institutions such as churches and schools marked the suburbanization of Tucson in the historic period. Aided by the automobile and improved transportation arteries, the focus of life for the majority of Tucson's residents shifted from the Barrio Historico to outlying areas such as John Spring Neighborhood. The John Spring neighborhood developed its own sense of social, ethnic, and architectural identity, set apart from its neighbors by visually prominent boundaries including the Southern Pacific Railroad tracks and three major traffic arteries. John Spring developed a strong sense of place apart from and independent of the downtown core of Tucson.

Architectural Significance:

The architecture of the John Spring Neighborhood Historic District is significant because it marks two important trends in local history: the change from purely local forms to forms which incorporated or depended on imported, Anglo features; and the adoption of mass-produced designs by middle class homeowners. Properties marking these trends are concentrated in the district and display a high degree of integrity.

The shift from Hispanic to Anglo cultural dominance is reflected in a transition from Sonoran to imported architectural styles. Both Hispanic and Anglo styles were exported to outlying urbanizing areas of Tucson, but usually one or the other predominated. John Spring Neighborhood Historic District is distinct from other Tucson districts as an early outlying area of suburban scale to which all phases of the Hispanic Anglo transition were carried, and can still be compared to each other within a compact area. By contrast, other outlying districts -- Armory Park, West University -- display mainly Queen Anne, Bungalow, and Revival architecture reflecting their majority Anglo population. Barrio Historico Historic District has predominantly Sonoran architecture, and El Presidio Historic District is like Spring district in having a balanced mixture of Sonoran and imported forms; but both of these districts are part of the nineteenth-century urban layout of narrow streets, small lots, and houses at front lot-line. Outside of Spring and the downtown districts, adobe row houses in particular are rare. Those that remain, except in Spring district, are not in recognized historic districts and are unlikely to be preserved.

Population growth following World War I was marked in Tucson by a large stock of housing in nationally popular styles. While most of Tucson's historic districts from this period had either a chiefly Anglo or a chiefly Hispanic middle class, John Spring Neighborhood Historic District is distinct in that its 1920s and 1930s housing was owned and occupied by a near-equal mixture of Hispanics, blacks, and Anglos. Three surviving churches and a school, major contributors to the district, symbolize the multi-ethnic heritage of the district.

 Historic District Item number 10 Page 1

The legal boundary of John Spring Neighborhood Historic District is the inside curb line of all perimeter streets, or the outer edge of any property parcel which lies at the perimeter of the district. Lots are defined as the corresponding City of Tucson tax parcel, as identified on the relevant Inventory forms for district properties. The district boundary is indicated by the line shown on the accompanying base map.

The district boundary is drawn to include those buildings of the John Spring Multiple Resource Area which display the highest levels of architectural integrity and contribute to cohesive historic streetscapes. The boundary excludes all non-contributing properties at the edges of the district.

CONTRIBUTING PROPERTY

ADDRESS: 818 N. 11th Avenue

The above-referenced property was listed as a non-contributor to the John Spring Neighborhood Historic District, Tucson, Pima County, Arizona.

Due to its extremely deteriorated condition, the house at 818 N. 11th Avenue was listed as a non-contributor in the nomination sent to the Keeper in 1989. The property should have been listed as a contributor at the time of the nomination despite its poor condition. However, since this error was not caught until the house was recently rehabilitated, we are now requesting that the property be listed as a contributor. Attached is a photograph of the property.

The Arizona SHPO requests the Keeper to add the above-referenced property to the "Contributor" list in the nomination as it is a contributor to the historic fabric of the John Spring Neighborhood Historic District.

DELISTING OF PROPERTY

LOCATION: 912 North Perry Avenue
SURVEY SITE #: 143-14

This property is currently listed as a contributor to the John Spring Neighborhood Historic District, Tucson, Pima County, Arizona.

The Arizona State Historic Preservation Office staff learned that this building suffered a severely damaging fire in 2003 and was subsequently remodeled. Investigation revealed that this remodeling included substantial changes to the property, including stuccoing of the exterior brick walls, replacement of the windows, removal of a dormer, and a new roof without extended eaves or exposed rafters. The property no longer retains sufficient integrity to convey its historic significance.

The Arizona SHPO requests the Keeper to approve removing the property from the list of contributors to the John Spring Neighborhood Historic District.

It has recently come to the attention of the Arizona State Historic Preservation Office that the age of the property located at 836 N Queen Avenue was mistakenly noted as "ca. 1946" on the National Register registration form for the John Spring Historic District. Further research in the City of Tucson directories indicates that the property was constructed in 1929. As the property possesses sufficient integrity and was constructed within the period of significance for the John Spring Historic District, it should be noted as a contributor.

The Arizona State Historic Preservation Office requests the Keeper of the National Register amend the John Spring Historic District National Register registration from to change 836 N Queen Avenue from non-contributor to contributor status.
