The building was completed in May, 1892, for use as a city hall. It was built on a sandstone ledge overlooking Bellingham The foundation is reinforced concrete and the main Bay. structure is red brick, with local Chuckanut sandstone trim. The roofwas terne metal roof cladding over wood rafters and the present roof is a recent (1966) replacement of the original. The earlier laminated wood beams have been replaced with new structural steel beams and wood rafters during renovation The building has been found in sound condition began in 1966. by two groups of structural engineers. No bearing walls have been replaced, but some non-bearing walls have been removed in areas to allow for larger display galleries and installment of walk-in glass cases. Heating, plumbing, and electrical systems have been replaced with new materials. The basement and first floor; have been completely renovated, using as much authentic material where possible, or with tasteful substitution of new materials. The center bell tower, which was destroyed in the fire of 1962, has not been replaced yet, but it is a future The original hand-carved wood staircase, panellings, and goal. moldings have been refinished. Period chandeliers have been installed, and modern display lighting is utilized. The second and third floor renovation awaits further funds from private and public sources. In October, 1966, Bellingham was presented the Annual Award of the Washington State Arts Commission for its efforts to preserve and restore the old City Hall, new called the Whatcom Museum of History and Art.

city fathers vacated it in 1939, and has also become a vital community center since the renovations began in 1666. (A fire in 1962 essentially closed down the building to the public for six years, but a determined group of Friends kept the idea going, and renovation has reawakened the public/interest in the history of our community.) The first public opening after renovation was in June of 1968, with the comprehensive exhibit of the "Arts of a Vanished Era", an account of the Pacific Northwest Coast's early inhabitants, the Indians. This show closed in December of 1968, with a total attendance of more than fifty-five thousand people, and a new show of the early white settlement of the "Fourth Corner" opened in January of this year. The next show of historic interest, scheduled to open late in 1969, will show the contribution of the early industries to the rapid growth of the Pacific Northwest Coast.
