San Luis Obispo, CA

Narrative Description

The Ah Louis Store is a two story, brick, Victorian Italianate-style building in a rectangular plan which was built in 1885 and is approximately 2000 square feet in size. The store is on the northwest corner of Palm and Chorro Streets in the periphery of the downtown commercial core of San Luis Obispo, diagonally across the street from Mission San Luis Obispo de Tolosa, which was built in 1776. It is located in the center of the old Chinatown area of San Luis Obispo which dates back to the 1870s. The store is surrounded by an asphalt covered parking lot with 20 spaces dedicated for downtown parking. On the same lot, a detached modern single story two car garage made of masonry block and dating from the 1960s sits diagonally across from the store on the opposite corner. An attached corrugated metal shed carport is attached to the back of the store dating from the 1940s. A bronze bell, made in China in 2002, sits in its temporary wooden stand just to the right of the store as you are facing the front on Palm Street.

The foundation and walls of the Ah Louis Store are made of brick made from Ah Louis's own brickworks. The building has a composition asphalt sloped roof, hidden by a parapet. The storefront facade is made of plaster which covers the underlying bricks. The top of the facade is graced with a projecting cornice and four plaster finials. Also on the front is a second story projecting balcony made of wood supported by iron brackets and surrounded with iron railing. It is accessible by an upstairs door. Original heavy iron shutters cover all the windows and doors of the entire building, except for the two upstairs windows and the single upstairs door in the front, and are still functional. One is even scarred by indentations from gunfire from a previous era.

The interior of the downstairs store retains the original built-in wooden shelves and cabinetry from the late 19th century made of painted California redwood. They line three of the four walls inside the store and retain most of the drawers, hardware, and pull out bins located below the shelves where merchandise was stored at one time. A storage room in the back of the store is lined with the original rough timber shelves and racks which stored merchandise and barrels. The walls which are not covered by cabinetry are plastered. The floors and ceilings are wooden planks both upstairs and downstairs. The room dividers both upstairs and downstairs are the original redwood planks. The upstairs interior retains the original room dividers of the living quarters and the walls and ceilings retain the original wallpaper from the late Victorian Era. The upstairs is divided into six rooms including three bedrooms, a sitting room, a kitchen, and a bathroom connected by a central hallway. The door hardware is original throughout the building. The property is in excellent condition and is almost all original since its construction except for minimal visible alterations including the recent earthquake retrofitting, rewiring, and replumbing in 2005. Prior to this, the only alterations since its original construction include placing a small toilet in the downstairs storage room and converting a storage room upstairs into a bathroom during the 1920s. In 1931, as modern storefront facades became fashionable on commercial building, two plate glass windows were installed in front of the building for $250.00. The original counters in the downstairs store were also removed in the 1940s as were the glass doors that covered the herbal section of the shelves. A corrugated metal shed carport was attached to the back of the store in the 1940s, and a modern two car garage built in the 1960s at the opposite end of the lot.

Beginning January of 2005, by mandate of the City of San Luis Obispo, the building was earthquake retrofitted and brought up to code. On the exterior, the earthquake retrofitting included a new roof which was secured to the surrounding walls with steel supports. On the sides and back walls, broken and cracked bricks with missing mortar caused by previous earthquakes were repaired. Two of these cracks had actually caused two inch steps running along the entire length of the cracks caused by movement of the bricks; these steps were eliminated and the walls smoothed. Old, disfiguring repairs made to the outside since the 1950s were removed along with exterior plumbing and electrical lines. The second floor balcony was repaired with new planking and the original iron railing restored. On the interior, a new footing in the foundation was poured shoring up the west wall on the Chorro Street side. Inside the building, the front and west walls above the new footing were reinforced with shotcrete extending to the roof. A steel beam was inserted in the back wall between the first and second floors, hidden in an existing soffit. The floor joists and ceiling rafters were secured to the brick walls to secure them in case of an earthquake. New plywood sheathing was laid across the entire second story floor to gain shear strength. An upstairs existing room divider wall was reinforced to make it a load bearing shear wall. The damaged plaster on the entire west wall including the portion overlying the new shotcrete was restored. Other upstairs wall surfaces which were previously water damaged from a leaking roof were also replastered. The entire building was rewired and a new junction box installed. the center of the store was left in place as a decoration. A new gas furnace was installed for heating. The entire downstairs was repainted in its original Victorian colors. An overhead fire sprinkler system was installed throughout the building according to the building code. The San Luis Obispo County Historical Society was consulted before the planned work was begun. Essentially all work done, except for the exterior brick repair, was hidden inside the walls and attic areas and thus there was no effect on the property's historic integrity.

Statement of Significance

The Ah Louis Store is significant not only as a surviving building from the historic Chinese-American community in San Luis Obispo but also through its identification with the Chinese-American pioneer Ah Louis, or On Wong. It was the center of Chinatown in San Luis Obispo from 1874 to 1930 and the home of Ah Louis and his family of eight children from 1885 to 1936. Originally built as a wooden structure in 1874, in 1885, it was replaced on the same site with the brick building that stands today. During that time, it served the Chinese and Asian community in San Luis Obispo as its general store, post office, bank, employment office, and gathering place. Chinese workers hired there helped to build the railroads of the Pacific Coast Railway and the Southern Pacific Railroad from 1874 to 1894. During this time, Ah Louis also contracted to build many roads throughout the county and the wharf at Port San Luis. His men also worked in agriculture and domestic work throughout San Luis Obispo County. Ah Louis was a prosperous businessman who, besides becoming a successful employer and labor organizer, was a merchant and farmer who pioneered the flower and vegetable seed business in San Luis Obispo County. He also built the first brick yard in the area, and many of today's historical buildings in San Luis Obispo were built out of the bricks he made. He often served as a bridge between the Asian and white communities.

Historical background and significance:

In 1861, 21 year old Wong On left his village near the city of Canton, China, in order to avoid the Taiping Rebellion and to search for gold in America. At first, he prospected in the Washington and Oregon areas and by 1867, he arrived in San Luis Obispo attracted by the climate which was favorable for his chronic asthma. He found work as a cook but within several years, he formed a series of partnerships that made him the principal Chinese labor contractor of the San Luis Obispo region. In 1868, Captain John Harford, the "father" of Port San Luis, recognized him as enterprising, and gave him the name, Ah Louis. He encouraged Ah Louis to become an employment agent to the Chinese laborers, or coolies, as they were called, which were needed in the area. Using Ah Louis' Chinese laborers, Harford and Ah Louis went on to build the first wharf in Port San Luis in 1873, known today as Avila Beach. Around this time, he brought in 160 Chinese laborers from San Francisco by schooner to fill in these and other positions. In 1875, Ah Louis' men helped John Harford build a longer wharf, which is still in use today. In 1874, Ah Louis also served as foreman and employment agent for the construction crew in helping to build the Pacific Coast Railway, a three-foot narrow gauge railroad that ran from the shipping wharves at Port Harford, ten miles to the south end of San Luis Obispo, which was completed in 1876. It was the first narrow gauge railroad in Southern California. Ah Louis was paid 10 cents per day for each man and provided them with food and lodging and also served as spokesman for the group. In August of 1881, with the help of Ah Louis' coolies, the railroad began its extension south to Arroyo Grande and in 1882, extended to Santa Maria and then ultimately reached Los Alamos.

Ah Louis also realized a need for a labor force in the county and used his laborers to construct public works projects, work in agriculture in planting and harvesting, serve as household cooks, laundrymen, and handymen, and work in hotels, restaurants, private homes, and hospitals. By 1876, Ah Louis won labor contracts for road building including a county road from Paso Robles to Cambria, and from Arroyo Grande to Nipomo. In 1877, he also contracted with the county to build a stage coach road over Cuesta Grade to Santa Margarita. In 1882, with a contract for $1,100, Ah Louis' Chinese laborers were used to drain a swamp in the Laguna land reclamation and drainage project.

In 1871, Ah Louis established the first brick yard in the area, on the north side of Cerro San Luis Obispo, using time-honored Chinese methods to make them. It inspired local builders to construct many downtown buildings of brick rather than wood. Bricks made by Ah Louis were used to build some of the county's most historic buildings still standing today including the Andrews block, the Sinsheimer building, the Hall of Records, a wing of the San Luis Obispo de Tolosa Mission, and a railroad roundhouse. They were also used to build a three-story Courthouse in 1873.

The original Ah Louis Store was constructed out of wood in 1874 on its present site. In 1875, ads began to appear in the Tribune advertising to sell goods and offering "Chinese labor contracted for on short notice." As his business expanded, Ah Louis outgrew it and in 1885, contracted with Alfred Walker to build the larger brick building that exists today using bricks that Ah Louis had made. The Tribune called it, "an ornament to the city, and shows the proprietor to be an enterprising, competent businessman." It was the first Chinese store in the county, selling general merchandise and food, and serving as a bank, post office, gathering point, and employment office for the Chinese community. He imported and sold Chinese and Japanese merchandise and food including curious and exotic items such as herbs, salted duck eggs, sea cucumbers, dried abalone, peanut oil, and various teas, besides selling sacks of grain, coffee, beans, Levis, and whiskey. The store became the hub of Chinatown in San Luis Obispo, a two block area on the edge of downtown San Luis Obispo, across the street from the Mission San Luis Obispo de Tolosa. Ah Louis was its "unofficial mayor." The Ah Louis Store was the center of celebration on holidays such as the Chinese New Year. Large fireworks displays were common during these times until around 1930, by which time most of the Chinese had left San Luis Obispo County.

Up until 1892, the Southern Pacific Railroad was planning to connect their Southern California and Northern California railways thereby allowing uninterrupted transportation across the state by rail. However, they were cut off from each other by a large mountain range, the Santa Lucia Mountains, commonly known as Cuesta Grade, which stood in their way approximately five miles north of San Luis Obispo. Between 1892 and 1894, the Southern Pacific Railroad undertook the formidable task of digging a series of eight tunnels through the mountains which would allow the railroads to connect the northern and southern parts of the state. Ah Louis served as a labor organizer for this project and by April of 1892, had workers under contract to help in the construction. Finally, on May 4, 1894, the first the train arrived with much fanfare in the San Luis Obispo train station from northern California. Thus, Ah Louis was involved with railroad construction from 1874 to 1894. Today, the Southern Pacific Railroad still uses five of the original tunnels. For some years during the end of the 19th century, Ah Louis contracted for work in the flower fields of the Aggeler-Musser Seed Company. He eventually leased his own farms and pioneered the vegetable and flower seed business in the county on six farms near Oceano, Santa Maria, Pismo Beach and Nipomo. Much of his business was derived from World War I government contracts between 1915 and 1919. The seeds were shipped all over the United States.

Ah Louis also constructed rooming houses and other buildings next door to the Ah Louis Store which he rented to Chinatown residents. These were torn down in the 1950s. In 1870, a census noted 4,567 white and 59 Chinese living in the county. At its peak, in the early 1890s during the construction of the Southern Pacific Railroad over Cuesta Grade, the estimated Chinese population was 2000, and one in ten San Luis Obispo residents was Chinese. At the turn of the century, estimates are that the Chinese population had dropped back to 700 to 800. By 1930, almost all of the Chinese had left San Luis Obispo for Los Angeles, San Francisco, or to return home to China. Eventually, the buildings of Chinatown slowly disappeared and today, the Ah Louis Store is one of only four buildings still surviving from the original Chinatown, the other three being built in the early 20th century. The Ah Louis Store is the earliest surviving land deed in the County records and is currently one of the oldest buildings in California still owned by the family of the original builder.

Ah Louis passed away December 16, 1936 at the age of 96.

On August 21, 1975, the Ah Louis Store was dedicated by the State of California as State Historical Landmark No. 802. A plaque resides on the front of the store reads:
