DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Because Maine's first communities were ravaged by Indian raids, virtually no documented seventeenth century dwellings have survived. The earliest houses in the state are those York County examples as the John Sedgley Homestead, which was built during the early eighteenth century resettlement period.

The Sedgley Homestead consists of a c.1716 Cape, a.c. 1720 house, and four subsidiary structures of an indeterminate date, a barn, a wagon shed, and two outbuildings. The Homestead is located in an unchanged rural setting within the town of York.

Sedgley's first home is a low posted Cape Cod style dwelling which literally hugs the ground upon which it is sited. The house is rectangular, stands one and a half stories high, and has a one story ell projecting from the rear. The structure, has a granite foundation, is of frame construction with a clapboarded exterior, and displays a square brick central chimney protruding from the roof.

The facade of Sedgley's Cape features an unsymmetrical four bay composition. A four panel door is flanked on either side by sidelights. To the left of the doorway is one window, while to the right are two. These windows, as well as others in the house, have nineteenth century six-over-six sash.

المربح المكالمجر لابات متتاكية استارية الكلاب الترابيسية

The two side walls of the Cape each contain two first story windows and a half story one. The rear wall consists of three windows and the ell.

The interior plan of Sedgley's first home is a simple one. The doorway opens into a small hallway with a staircase in front of the central chimney leading to the half story. At both the first and half story levels, the stairhall is flanked on either side by a room. The ell also contains a room. On both the exterior and the interior, eighteenth century finish is extremely plain.

Approximately five years after John Sedgley built his Cape, he erected a more substantial dwelling nearby. This house is rectangular, stands two and a half stories tall, and has a two and a half story ell at the rear. The structure has a granite foundation, is of frame construction with a clapboarded exterior, and features a large rectangular brick chimney projecting from the roof.

The three bay facade of Sedgley's later home reflects the emerging symmetry of eighteenth century New England architecture. The first story central bay consists of a gable roofed projecting entry with a four paneled door on the front and a window on either side. This entrance is flanked on either side by a window. The second story of the facade consists of a symmetrical arrangement of three windows. ITEM NUMBER 7 PAGE

All of the facade windows as well as the other first and second story windows on the house have nenteenth century six-over-six sash.

The two side walls each contain one first, second and half story window. The half story windows have six panes rather than twelve. The rear wall has only one first story window, for this side of the house is covered largely by the ell.

Sedgley's second house has only one more room than his first, but provides far more space. The facade entry opens on to a small hall which contains a staircase in front of the massive central chimney. A. both the first and second story levels, the stairhall is flanked on either side by a room. In addition, the ell has a room on its first and second stories. The half story of both the house and the ell consists of an open attic. As with the Cape, both exterior and interior trim are of the utmost simplicity.

Adjacent to the Cape and the main house are a barn, a wagon shed, and two outbuildings. Together these six frame structures present a revealing essay in the restrained design which characterized Maine architecture during its formative years.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

8 SIGNIFICANCE

Having been restored with great care where necessary, the two houses and various outbuildings of the John Sedgley homestead are particularly fine examples of the development of an early 18th century farmstead in southern Maine. Located in a still largely unspoiled area they present an appearance little changed during the 250 years of their existance.

John Sedgley, born in England between 1680 and 1690 and a turner by trade, came to York as a young man. He married in January of 1714 Elizabeth, the seventh child of Thomas and Hannah Adams a prominent York family collaterally related to the famous Adams's of Quincy, Massachusetts. The lot upon which the homestead stands was given to the young couple by Thomas Adams in March of 1715 and in the same year they built the five-room Cape Cod house which became their first home.

Within a short space of time (probably about five years) a growing family required larger quarters and Sedgley constructed the six-room two-story dwelling closely adjoining. The older house probably became a residence in due time for the oldest son, John Sedgley II.

Adams in January and December of 1716 added two more lots to the Sedgley holdings and by middle life the latter, in addition to his trade as a turner had become a respected and prosperous landholder in York. Although not a leader in community affairs himself, his son was elected Surveyor of Highways in 1775.

Since the Town of York, one of the earliest settlements in Maine, was almost completely wiped out by the great Indian raid of 1692, the John Sedgley Homestead presents one of the best and most substantial examples of the new settlement which sprang up and formed the foundation of the present community.
