RE: Delisting of the Lewis & Taylor Lumber Yard Office, Acadia Parish, LA

Dear Mr. Gabbert:

The purpose of this letter is to notify you of our intent to delist the above property from the National Register of Historic Places. Originally listed on the Register on July 14, 1995, the above property was demolished sometime after 1995 and has been replaced either with new construction or has been heavily altered. Comparing the nomination photos and current images, it appears that it is new construction that reused the four original columns. Per 36 CFR 60, Sec. 60.15 (a)(1), we are requesting that the above property be officially delisted based on the fact that the property has ceased to meet the criteria for listing in the National Register because the qualities which caused it to be originally listed have been destroyed. To support this claim, we have included the map submitted with the original nomination, a current bird's eye view, and a street-level view with original nomination photos for comparison.

We have notified the property owner and the chief elected official and have included copies of those letters with this submission. No responses were received.

If you have any questions concerning our request, please contact our National Register Coordinator, Jessica Richardson via email at jrichardson@crt.la.gov or by phone at 225-219-4595.

Sincerely,

Phil Boggan

Continuation SheetLewis and Taylor Lumberyard Office, Rayne, Acadia Parish, LA

The Lewis & Taylor Lumberyard Office is a c. 1900 one story frame shotgun-type structure. The exact date of construction is unknown. It could have been built anytime between 1894, when the property was acquired by a lumber company, and 1903, when it first appears on a Sanborn map. (The 1898 Sanborn map does not show the appropriate section of town.) Except for its restrained Eastlake gallery, the building is extremely plain and cannot be attributed to any specific architectural style. Located at the edge of the central business district of the Acadia Parish community of Rayne, the recently rehabilitated structure faces a busy railroad track which bisects the CBD. Although the building has experienced a very short move from its nearby original site, it remains eligible for National Register listing.

Lewis & Taylor was one of a series of lumberyards which served the Rayne area at least as far back as 1885. Originally part of a compound located on the south side of the railroad corridor at the corner of Texas and Parkerson, the office building was moved to the north side of the railroad and one block to the east (see map) by Louis Privat, who purchased the lumberyard in 1913. Privat planned to construct a larger office building on the site and had done so by at least 1926, as shown on a Sanborn map of that date. (The candidate is shown in its present location on 1926 and 1933 maps.) Although it no longer has its related lumberyard buildings, the Lewis & Taylor office remains within sight of the railroad track and the Rayne central business district of which the office was a part.

The structure is one room wide and three rooms deep. The rear room is a few feet wider than the other two so that it can connect with the gallery attached to the building's facade and west side elevation. Eastlake elements found on this gallery include turned columns, brackets suggestive of the wheel motif, ball drop ornaments, and bands of sawtooth ornament outlining the roofline. The building's main door appears to be original. It features twin arched glass panes above rectangular wooden panels. Three other original entrances (two on the side gallery and one within the back wall of the rear room) survive. Although now very difficult to see because of over-painting, the words "Lewis & Taylor" are etched into the building's front gable.

On the interior, the front room features horizontally laid beaded boards above a vertical beaded board wainscot. The two are separated by a simple chair rail. Door and window surrounds in this room are molded, with bull's eye blocks anchoring the top corners of each surround. Interestingly, the two corner blocks on each surround match each other but do not match the others in the room. It is not known whether this treatment was done on purpose to display some of the lumbyard's products or was simply the result of using scrap materials during construction. Beaded boards also cover the walls in the central room, as well as the ceilings of the central and rear spaces. The walls of the rear room are sheathed in flush boards.

The Lewis and Taylor Lumberyard Office on the exterior looks much as it did originally, with the principal alterations being the removal of one window, one door, and a stoop with a shed roof from the east side of the structure (per a historic photograph). These changes may well have occurred at the time of the move. Also, two small windows have been added at the rear of the east side elevation. Minor alterations include the replacement of two broken two-light transoms with clear glass panes by stained glass panels and the installation of shutters on all windows. The building was deteriorated when the present owner acquired it. The damaged porch floor and some of the sawtooth ornament have been replaced, and each of the Eastlake columns has had its bottom portion boxed in to provide extra support to the damaged wood. Some of the rear siding has been replaced, and a storm door has been installed on the rear entrance. On the interior, the damaged ceiling of the front room has been replaced, Eastlake brackets have been installed between the front and central rooms, shelving has been added in two rooms, French doors have been installed between the central and rear rooms, and the rear room has been subdivided to create a bathroom space on its east side. The central room has received kitchen cabinets and other kitchen appliances. In accomplishing these changes and repairs, the owner has been careful to either preserve or replicate historic materials whenever possible.

Assessment of Integrity:

Despite the above changes, the building on the exterior looks much as it did originally. Although moved a short distance and no longer retaining its associated lumbyard structures, the building has such a distinctive appearance (i.e., a shotgun with an L-shaped porch) that it would be immediately recognizable to someone from the historic period as the old Lewis and Taylor Lumberyard Office.

Lewis and Taylor Lumberyard Office, Rayne, Acadia Parish

The Lewis & Taylor Lumberyard Office Building is locally significant in the area of commerce because it is a rare survivor to represent the early look of the Rayne CBD. Frame commercial buildings such as the Lewis & Taylor office represent a clearly discernible chapter in the evolution of small town commercial sectors in the state, as explained below. The building is also a rare surviving lumberyard-related resource within a several parish area in South Louisiana. The period of significance in this respect, c.1900 to c.1915, corresponds to the building's use as a lumberyard office.

Like many towns across Louisiana, Rayne came into being when the railroad arrived in the area. In 1880, the Louisiana Western Railroad bypassed the nearby hamlet of Pouppeville. Dr. William H. Cunningham, a railroad employee, purchased land along the route and established a new town named Rayne Station after railroad official B. W. L. Rayne. Town lots went on sale in November 1880. As occurred so often in similar cases, the merchants of Pouppeville physically relocated their stores to the new community, as did church officials with their building. The town incorporated on March 20, 1883, while its first newspaper was founded in 1886. In that year the citizens of southwestern St. Landry Parish voted to break off from the mother parish and establish a new parish known as Acadia. Although most people assumed that Rayne, as the most important town in the area, would become the new parish seat, the honor eventually went to the rival town of Crowley. However, with a strong economy based on rice and lumber production, Rayne continued to flourish.

The development of the central business district which resulted from this prosperity was similar to that in other Louisiana towns of the period. The general trend was for the first generation of commercial structures to be of frame construction. These buildings were gradually supplanted by brick replacements as fires destroyed early buildings, city leaders passed laws requiring "fireproof" brick construction, and growing prosperity allowed merchants to invest in finer buildings. This pattern can clearly be seen in Rayne. Its first generation of commercial structures consisted of one and two story frame buildings which lined both sides of the east-to-west railroad corridor. This is verified by the 1898 Sanborn Fire Insurance Map--the first available for the town. Rayne suffered from a series of six devastating fires between 1900 and 1920. The first fire (1902) took five commercial structures, while two 1903 conflagrations destroyed an entire block plus at least eight more buildings. A 1908 fire took a large rice mill and mercantile warehouse, while a 1909 fire destroyed an important local department store. Finally, a 1917 explosion and fire destroyed a large hotel.

Rayne received its first brick building (the Rayne State Bank) in 1901 and three more in 1902. The 1903 Sanborn map shows five masonry structures within the business district. By the time the 1933 Sanborn map was prepared, approximately half of the buildings in the central business district were of masonry construction. Today, there is little left to represent the early frame building look of the Rayne CBD. The majority of historic buildings are second or third generation brick structures. The candidate and possibly one other building survive to illustrate the early commercial look of Rayne. (There are three or four other frame commercial buildings in the CBD but they are clearly from the 1930s or perhaps even slightly later.)

The Lewis and Taylor Lumberyard Office is also locally significant in the area of commerce as a rare surviving resource associated with the retail sale of lumber during the great Louisiana lumber boom. Lumber production in the state was negligible until the late nineteenth century, when the industry began a steady climb to preeminence. The boom years are loosely defined as c.1890 to c.1930, with the meteoric growth occurring in the first two decades of the twentieth century. By 1920 Louisiana ranked second in production nationwide, although the industry was already on a downward curve. The 1920s is largely a decade of decline as the previously vast timber resources played out.

During the boom years the Louisiana landscape was dotted with sawmills and lumber company towns. Often overlooked in an analysis of lumber boom related resources are lumberyards. Although the state's timber was shipped nationwide, it, of course, was also sold at retail lumberyards across the state as Louisianians embarked upon a feverish pace of building. (A large number of the state's towns came into being in this period and old towns received new buildings in the latest styles.) Sanborn maps from the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries show that even small towns had at least one lumberyard, and often two or three. Lumberyard compounds typically consisted of a prominent office building, various lumber sheds and sometimes a separate building to sell a specific product such as sashes or doors. Today extremely few lumberyard related resources survive. For example, the SHPO staff, which has traveled and worked extensively in the region, knows of only three such properties in a several parish area in southern Louisiana (the candidate, a complete lumberyard complex in Opelousas, and a large lumber shed in Abbeville). Although the Lewis and Taylor building has been moved a short distance, no longer has its lumber sheds and has been in residential use for some time, there is no question that someone from the historic period would recognize it, given its distinctive appearance, as noted in the assessment of integrity in Part 7.

ABSTRACT/SUMMARY COMMENTS:

This small frame structure is significant as one of the few remaining resources in the town of Rayne testifying to the importance of the railroad and the lumber industry in the growth of the town. It is also one of only two early frame commercial buildings to have survived the disastrous fires of the early 20th century. Although the east side of the building shown in the historic photo has been altered, the other elevations clearly testify to the building's commercial function. The building was moved in 1913 to its present location, but the original relationship to the railroad tracks, central to its historic function, was maintained.

RE: Delisting of Lewis & Taylor Lumber Yard Office, Acadia Parish, LA

Dear Mr. Morgan:

The purpose of this letter is to notify you of our intent to petition for the removal of the above referenced property from the National Register of Historic Places, a process known as delisting. This step is important as we strive to maintain an accurate record of properties in our state that are listed in the Register, still extant, and maintain integrity per National Register Criteria. In many cases, buildings were destroyed many years ago and the official delisting paperwork was not completed. We have made this task a priority for 2016. Per information from the Acadia Parish tax assessor, you are the current owner of the land where the listed resource once stood. As part of this process, we are required to notify the current owner of this action.

The Lewis & Taylor Lumber Yard Office was listed on the National Register on 7/14/1995. According to the Federal National Register regulations [36 CFR 6-.15 (a)(1)], a property may be delisted if it has ceased to meet the criteria for listing on the National Register because the qualities which caused it to be originally listed have been lost or destroyed. Per current satellite and street view images of the property, the historic building is no longer standing. It appears that sometime after 1995, the building was demolished and replaced with new construction. Because the building, and its qualities that caused it to have been listed, are destroyed, this property will be proposed for removal from the National Register. The final delisting decision will be made by the Keeper of the National Register at the National Park Service.

The regulations [36 CFR 60.15 (g)] also require that the property's owner be given an opportunity to comment and the chief elected official notified of the proposed action. If you choose to comment, please respond via letter by May 27th, 2016 to the following address:

Phil Boggan
State Historic Preservation Officer
Louisiana Division of Historic Preservation
PO Box 44247
Baton Rouge, LA 70804

If you have questions concerning the delisting petition or any other National Register issue, please contact National Register Coordinator, Jessica Richardson, by email at jrichardson@crt.la.gov, or by phone at 225-219-4595.

Sincerely,

RE: Delisting of Lewis & Taylor Lumber Yard Office, Acadia Parish, LA

Dear Mayor Robichaux:

The purpose of this letter is to notify you of our intent to petition for the removal of the above referenced property from the National Register of Historic Places, a process known as delisting. This step is important as we strive to maintain an accurate record of properties in our state that are listed in the Register, still extant, and maintain integrity per National Register Criteria. In many cases, buildings were destroyed many years ago and the official delisting paperwork was not completed. We have made this task a priority for 2016.

The Lewis & Taylor Lumber Yard Office was listed on the National Register on 7/14/1995. According to the Federal National Register regulations [36 CFR 6.15 (a)(1)], a property may be delisted if it has ceased to meet the criteria for listing on the National Register because the qualities which caused it to be originally listed have been lost or destroyed. Per current satellite and street view images of the property, the historic building is no longer standing. It appears that sometime after 1995, the building was demolished and replaced with new construction. Because the building, and its qualities that caused it to have been listed, are destroyed, this property will be proposed for removal from the National Register. The final delisting decision will be made by the Keeper of the National Register at the National Park Service.

The regulations [36 CFR 60.15 (g)] also require that the property's owner be given an opportunity to comment and the chief elected official notified of the proposed action. If you choose to comment, please respond via letter by May 27th, 2016 to the following address:
