Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Situated on the southeast corner of Lafond Avenue and Kent Street in St. Paul, the Church of St. Agnes is a monumental stone edifice executed in the Baroque Revival Style. The church occupies the western portion of the block, the remainder of which is apportioned to the rectory, convent, school, and parking lot. The church is the primary architectural element, although the entire block is organized into a unified complex.

The Church of St. Agnes was constructed in two stages. The first stage consisted of the construction of the basement level. This level is accessible from grade and has semi-circular window and door openings. The architect, George J. Ries, undoubtedly designed the basement with the design of the complete church in mind, as it is sheathed in Bedford limestone and conforms to the floor plan of the church above. The basement was occupied as a church from 1901 through 1908.

In 1909, Ries was directed to oversee the completion of the church. The first Mass was held in the completed structure in June of 1912.

The basic plan of St. Agnes takes the form of a Latin Cross with exceptionally short trancepts. Contrary to popular practice in ecclesiastical design, the campanile (or bell-tower) is situated to the rear of the structure, at the epistle (right) side of the apse rather than on the principal facade. A vestibule projects slightly from the main body of the building and is approached by a monumental staircase and terrace. To either side of the narthex and slightly set back from the front facade are two low polygonal projections. The one on the right is the Baptistry and that on the left, slightly larger in scale, is the "Maria Hilf" or Blessed Virgin Chapel. The entire structure is sheathed in Bedford limestone and is crowned by a high, tile-covered Mansard roof. The roof of the tower is copper.

The exterior design is noteworthy in its utilization of Baroque architectural motifs. Bays are defined by two-story stilted Ionic pilasters; these are paired at corners. Window openings are semi-circular arched and embellished by heavily carved hoods and projecting surrounds. Pedimented gables are placed above the front vestibule and the trancepts. The front gable is provided with a central recessed niche for statuary, whereas the gables on the trancepts have central bulls-eye windows. Each gable is surmounted by an ornate cross and coped raking cornice; urn-shaped stone finials are placed on the fractables. Entrances are placed within columned portals with scroll-type broken pediments. Small sculpture niches are also located on the second level of the vestibule where they flank an ornate window for symmetrical accent.

The campanile rises 205 feet above grade line. It has an open belfry; the bells are visible through a balustraded and colonnaded arch on each face of the tower. A clock occupies the space above the arch and directly beneath the onion-dome. The oniondome is, in turn, capped by an octagonal cupola and an ogee-curved spire with golden cross.

The interior plan is typical of the Latin Cross arrangement. Primary entry is gained either through the vestibule or directly into the narthex. The organ loft is located above the narthex and projects slightly into the nave. The length of the nave from the narthex to the communion rail is 132 feet 6 inches. The width of the nave is 72 feet 10 inches and is divided into a central double row of pews with two flanking side aisles. The ceiling is vaulted and supported by pillars and pilasters covered in scagliola with gilt capitals. A dome marks the crossing of the nave and trancept; the dome rises 60 feet above the nave floor. The height of the nave is 50 feet. The nave ceiling is constructed of plaster on steel framing.

The walls of the nave and sanctuary are decorated with stencilled and marbelized patterns. The sanctuary is raised two feet above the nave floor and is flanked by secondary apses, altars, and an oratory. The present high altar was installed in 1930, and is in keeping with the Baroque style of the church.

The Church of St. Agnes continues to serve its parish and remains in a wellpreserved state of architectural and historical integrity.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph) Builders: John Fischer, Lauer Brothers, and John R. Schmitt

The Church of St. Agnes is significant as one of the truly outstanding examples of Baroque Revival eclesiastical architecture in Minnesota. In addition, it is historically significant as a testament to the importance of religion in the life of the German-speaking Austro-Hungarian immigrant community of St. Paul. Constructed in a style frequently found in southern Germany, Austria, and Jugoslavia, the Church of St. Agnes is a well-known St. Paul landmark; its prominent onion-domed tower is visible from many distant vantage points. The present congregation comprises many decendents of the first parishioners, immigrants who had found employment in the Great Northern Railway's Dale Street shops, and who had constructed their church at great expense. At the beginning of World War I, St. Agnes parish was the largest Germanspeaking Catholic parish in Minnesota.
