(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

Tanglewood is a one-story wood frame vernacular Greek Revival planter's cottage, facing north, on a city lot in Clinton, Mississippi. The house is composed of a symmetrical main block, two rooms deep off of the wide hall, with a galleried rear ell. The front porch is supported with six equally spaced rectangular wood boxed columns with plain molded capitals and bases. There are five bays: a centered pair of 12-light wood doors set within a plain surround containing sidelights with four lights and one panel and a rectangular transom with seven lights, flanked on either side by two equally spaced floor-length nine-over-nine double-hung wood windows with plain surrounds. The house retains its interior features such as moldings, doors, windows, and mantelpieces. Originally constructed c. 1845, Tanglewood was moved from its original location c. 1878. A 1926 renovation introduced Craftsman elements, most prominently the broken pitch roof, triangular knees braces and exposed rafters. As a whole, the house retains its integrity of materials, workmanship and association. It has retained the integrity of its current location and setting for one hundred years longer than in its original setting.

Narrative Description

Tanglewood is a one-story wood frame vernacular Greek Revival cottage, facing east, on a city lot in Clinton, Mississippi. The house is composed of a symmetrical main block, two rooms deep off of the wide hall, with a galleried rear ell. The house sits on low brick piers and a brick curtain wall surrounds the house. Exterior walls are clad in clapboards. The side gable asphalt shingle roof extends to the front and back with a broken slope that shelters a full-façade porch. The current roof pitch was probably introduced in 1926 along with widely-overhanging eaves supported with large triangular brackets and exposed rafters. The original roof probably was a side gable that extended in an unbroken slope over the front porch. There is a six-over-six double-hung wood window in each gable end. The front porch is supported with six equally spaced rectangular wood boxed columns with plain molded capitals and bases—these appear to be original to at least the 1870s, if not the 1840s. A simple balustrade with a molded rail connects the columns. The porch floor is wood and the ceiling is beaded board. Concrete centered stairs provide access. There are five bays: a centered pair of 12-light wood doors set within a plain surround containing sidelights with four lights and one panel and a rectangular transom with seven lights is flanked on either side by two equally spaced floor-length nine-over-nine double-hung wood windows with plain surrounds. While the 12-light doors appear to date to the 1925 renovation, all other features on the front porch are probably original to the house's 1840s construction.

The south elevation features a nine-over-six wood window, a small one-over-one double-hung wood window, and two nine-over-six double-hung wood windows in the main block and three six-over-six double-hung wood windows in the enclosed back porch. The roof covers this section of the main block with a broken slope shed roof which appears to have originally been a rear porch. The west elevation of this section has a pair of two-over-two double-hung wood windows and a set of four two-over-two double-hung wood windows all set in plain openings. The south elevation of the ell has a porch recessed under the cross gable roof, supported with square wood boxed columns. There are three bays: a three-light, two-panel single-leaf wood door, a two-over-two double-hung wood window, a four-panel single-leaf wood door. A single-leaf five-panel (horizontal) wood door provides access to the house from the east end of the porch.

The north elevation has three nine-over-six double-hung wood windows in the main block and in the ell: a two-over-two double-hung wood window, a pair of two-over-two double-hung wood windows, a single two-over-two double-hung wood window, and a pair of two-over-two double-hung wood windows that are taller than the other windows in the ell. The rear of the ell has only one bay: a two-over-two double-hung wood window.

The plan of the main block consists of two rooms on either side of a very wide hall (9'8"). A cross gabled ell extends from the rear and an additional section was added to the rear of the ell. This section was faced with drop siding, as opposed to the clapboard of the main block, with exposed rafter ends.. There are no Sanborn Insurance Maps for Clinton to help confirm this date.

The rooms of the main block retain their heart pine floors, thirteen foot ceilings, plastered walls and ceilings, fluted and plain window surrounds, window and door surrounds highlighted by molded pediments, and tall plain baseboards with slight molded caps. The doors from the hall into the front right room are paired French doors, probably added during a 1926 renovation, while the rest of the doors are single-leaf four-panel wood doors. There is a set of bi-fold four-panel wood doors that separate the front half of the hall from the back half. At the end of the hall, at what is the original back door, there is a pair of French doors capped with a seven-light transom and peaked entablature. Most of the rest of the doors in the house are single-leaf four-panel wood. There are three Colonial Revival mantelpieces which may date to the 1926 renovation, but the chimneys have been removed. There are no crown moldings, but a picture rail has been added in one of the rooms.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

Tanglewood is locally significant under Criteria C-Architecture as one of the few surviving antebellum houses in Hinds County and as a well-preserved example of the vernacular Greek Revival galleried cottage, an architectural style that was popular in Mississippi prior to the Civil War. Tanglewood was moved from its original location c. 1878, and renovated in 1926, but retains its integrity of materials, workmanship and association.

Criteria C- Architecture

Tanglewood in Clinton, Mississippi is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places in the area of architecture (Criterion C) within the context of Clinton and Hinds County because it is a well-preserved, intact, and rare example of a vernacular Greek Revival planter's cottage with a full-façade gallery. The Mississippi Department of Archives and History's list of notable Greek Revival galleried one-story houses in Mississippi, as identified by May 2008, lists only one other one-story Greek Revival with full-façade gallery house in the Clinton area, the Cedars, 405 E. College Street (NR 1977). As is common with vernacular houses, Tanglewood has been modified in various phases over its lifetime, most significantly around 1926 when Craftsman and Colonial Revival features were added to the building's original Greek Revival details.

The Greek Revival style was the predominant style employed in residential architecture in Mississippi from the 1830s to the 1870s. The style developed from an increased interest in the architecture of ancient Greece that was being uncovered through archaeological investigation in the early part of the 19th century. The United States, being a newly formed country, appreciated the democratic ideals of ancient Greece and adopted its architecture as its own "national style." The style is represented by both "high style" works and vernacular Greek Revival residences, the latter often built by carpenters without overseeing architects, and are found in a variety of interpretations. The "high style" residences often exhibit classic Greek Revival composition and detailing such as full-height entry porches capped with pediments or entablatures, stuccoed or wood columns topped with classical capitals, and doorways framed with sidelights and transoms. A vernacular house form that developed in Mississippi is the galleried cottage which is further classified to include galleried cottages with gable roofs and center halls, galleried cottages with gabled roofs and center pediments, gabled with central cross-gabled upper porches, and gable-roofed cottage with galleries across both a side and gable end.

Tanglewood is best described as a raised planters cottage, a subtype of the broader galleried cottage, and is closely related to the Creole cottage of Louisiana and the Biloxi cottage, common on the Mississippi Gulf Coast. The raised planter's cottage form may rely in some fashion on Caribbean building traditions and were adopted across Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. Although there is variance in some features, the common features are most closely related to adaptations for tropical and subtropical climates. The raised planters cottage is generally raised off the ground to allow ventilation under the structure. The houses generally have a center hall running the depth of the house and are often double-pile. Full width galleries shield the walls from daytime sun and create outdoor living spaces. Galleries could be found on one, two, three or four sides.¹

When combined with the vernacular house form, such as the raised planters cottage, Greek Revival details allowed owners to express the latest architectural style but at a more reasonable cost than the high-style houses built by wealthy planters. Tanglewood represents the vernacular interpretation of the Greek Revival cottage with a full-façade gallery. The full-façade gallery of Tanglewood is supported with rectangular wood columns and its door surround is an understated version of the often elaborate classic Greek Revival entrance with sidelights and transom.

Bank records show the owners obtained a loan in 1926. The house was most likely renovated at that time. The most significant change was an alteration to the roof pitch, the addition of a front shed dormer (no longer extant) and the introduction of Craftsman details including eave brackets and exposed rafter tails.

The Cedars (listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1977), the only other Greek Revival house with a full-façade gallery remaining in the Clinton area, was constructed about 1835. The Cedars is a frame (clapboard) five-bay planter's cottage capped with a gable roof and a full-façade gallery supported with six square boxed wood columns. The plan is the same as Tanglewood, center hall, two rooms deep. The major difference between the two houses is the use of floor-length windows in Tanglewood, while the Cedars bays are six-over-six and are not floor length.²

Andrew and Nancy Thomas built Tanglewood for their daughter Mary Jane who married James A. Criddle in 1844. The house, named "Tanglewood" and constructed on land near Norrell Road, southwest of Clinton, Mississippi, was probably built around 1845. The Thomases also built a home for their daughter, Caroline Hedges, called "Sans Souci," and one for their daughter Martha England, which was named "Oakhurst," in addition to their own residence, "Sunnyside."³ None of these others houses is extant.

James Criddle was a planter and a partner in the mercantile firm, "Thomas and Criddle" in Clinton, Mississippi. Mary Jane Criddle volunteered in Confederate hospitals during the Civil War and was one of four women who helped sew the flag for the Mississippi College Rifle Company. In April 1861, 104 men from Mississippi College and Clinton enlisted to form the Mississippi College Rifles. During the Civil War, this group served as Company E of the Mississippi 18th Regiment. The Criddle's daughter, Caroline (Carrie), married Capt. William Lewis, a veteran of the war who fought at First Manassas, Antietam, Fredericksburg, and Gettysburg. He was one of only eight survivors of the Mississippi College Rifles.⁴

Mary Jane and William Lewis moved "Tanglewood" to its present lot on Jefferson Street in about 1878, the property having been purchased by Lewis's mother, Elizabeth.⁵ Lewis built a livery stable next to the house, which he operated for many years. In 1903, Lewis was elected an alderman in Clinton. Having no children of their own, the Lewises bequeathed the house, in 1921, to William Lewis's niece and nephew, Burke Ross and Pat Lewis. They in turn sold "Tanglewood" in 1922 to one of Carrie's nieces and her namesake, Carrie Lewis Criddle Fox, and her husband, John Henry Fox. In 1940, the house was deeded to the Fox's daughter, Emma Shirley Fox Fauchette, who held it until 2012 when it was sold to the current owners.

Although some Craftsman details were introduced, probably in the mid-1920s, Tanglewood is a rare local surviving example of the Greek Revival raised planters cottage as modified in a Craftzman style in the 1920s, Tanglewood retains its original massing, materials, proportion, fenestration, and integrity of location from 1878, when it was moved to its current location.
