hall now serves flanking rooms; and a rear wing has joined the kitchen to the main house block.

The southwest facade has been relaid with a seven-course common bond veneer. It has also been graced by a frame porch covering the center three bays, and a scrolled, bracketed cornice. Three dormers pierce the roof.

The brickwork has been relaid on both the southeast gable wall and a portion of the northeast wall.

The house plan is basically Georgian. The southeast room is the finer, as it is graced by a marble mantelpiece. The detailing is quite restrained, and includes splayed window casings and paneled wainscots under the windows. The hall stair railing describes an oval plan, and the hall is further distinguished by an arched, double door entry and a rosette chandelier medallion.

The rear wing, located to the northeast at cross axis to the main house block, contains another hall, a dining room, and the kitchen. The kitchen, though remodeled, still retains an enclosed winding stair access to servants' quarters above. A straight flight of stairs in the rear hall communicates with a rear bedroom and the northwest bed chamber. The second floor of the main portion of the house is similar in disposal to the first floor.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Ivy Dale Farm is situated on a tract that was originally a portion of "Pearman's Choice," granted by William Penn to Henry Pearman in 1684. Although Pearman subsequently sold much of the original tract, a portion descended to his daughter, who sold the land to William Cahoon.

In 1748 Cahoon sold his land to John Joy. By 1786 a house was located on the property, for John Joy willed to his sons the land "on which he dwelt." The land was described as "three contiguous pieces of Pearman's Choice, bought of three different claimers." In 1817 the property, known as a "mansion plantation," descended to Edward Joy Morris.

In 1837 Edward Joy Morris sold the Edward Joy farm to Joseph Hoffecker, a descendant of Henry Hoffecker, a German immigrant who settled near Smyrna. Joseph Hoffecker realized considerable prosperity from the farm lands. Thus, in 1845 he rebuilt the Joy house to suit his improved position.

When Joseph Hoffecker died in 1851, the farm, then called "Ivy Green," was inherited by John H. Hoffecker, a leading entrepreneur in the Smyrna area, known for his fruit-canning business. "Ivy Green" consisted of two hundred twenty-five acres, planted mostly in fruit
