Describe present and historic physical appearance.

The Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) Quarry (#2) consists of a granite outcropping mined by the CCC during the construction of Table Rock State Park. It is located approximately one mile south of Table Rock State Park and is situated in a wooded area. An approximately seventeen foot wide cut begins at a three foot ledge and proceeds to an approximately eight-foot ledge. Drilled holes from the last mining activity, for the placement of wedges, are evident along the face of the highest ledge. Metal fence posts have been placed in some of these wedge holes and a barbed wire fence stretches across the face of the ledge. A roadbed runs through the quarry in an approximately eight-foot deep cut.

The Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) Quarry (#2) is significant as one of the four quarry sites used for materials in the construction of park structures and facilities at Table Rock State Park. This was the first quarry site off park property used by the CCC for park construction. Much of the rock used in the construction of the dam and spillway, and the lodge was obtained from this quarry. In the early phases of the park's construction, rock was obtained from large boulders and the lake bed, both located on park property; however, these were soon exhausted and of poorer quality, necessitating a need to find a larger and better quarry off park property. The quarry was located on the property of Oscar Chastain, who, in early 1936, gave the CCC permission to extract as much rock as was needed. The quarry was located approximately a mile from the park and took longer to haul, but according to one of the project superintendents, it would save considerable time in "preparatory work." This site was quarried from 1936 to 1939, and in return for the use of the quarry, CCC workers constructed a concrete springhouse for the Chastain family. After this site was exhausted, another was located on the nearby property of Edward and Anna Chastain.(1)
