St. Paul's Episcopal Church is a symmetrical structure with a rectangular plan covered by a broad gable roof of medium pitch. All roof and gable ends are shingled. Walls are constructed of concrete block with rusticated surfaces. Three small gabled dormers punctuate each side of the roof. A stained glass window within a pointed arch is located in the front pediment. Below the base of the pediment a shed roof projects out over the narthex and two side chambers. The entry itself is marked by a ridge roof with expressed framing. Modifications have been few and minor.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Stylistically, St. Paul's Episcopal Church is unique among the institutional structures in Yuma. Its most distinctive features include a broad shingled roof, rusticated masonry base, and articulated framing in the porch--all characterisitics of the Shingle Style and its derivative the Western Stick Style. As both of these styles are more commonly associated with residential design its use for St. Paul's is exceptional. However, since the church is situated in the midst of a residential area with many Bungaloid homes, the design of the church was quite appropriate.
