STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Evonts, Etc.)

In order to provide water storage for enlargement of the Boise project, Arrowrock Dam was built by the United States Reclamation Service. At the time of completion Arrowrock was the highest dam in the world.

The surveyors and engineers completed their estimates by 1920, and work was started in February. A construction camp was established just below the dam site. Facilities required for the construction of the dam included a railroad, sawmill, dinky engines, draglines, gravel pit processors, concrete mixing plants, telephone system, power plant, hospital, store, laundry, bath house, club house, and cottages and dormitories.

The diversion works consisted of an upper and lower cofferdam and tunnel through the granite side-wall. Then, the excavation progressed rapidly via dragline and trucking operations. After bedrock was located, concrete was poured and the structure took shape as the three major concrete sections evolved. The concrete phase started in November, 1912, and three years later the dam was placed in operation. The resulting reservoir impounds 280,000 acre-feet and it is 17 miles long. The original cost of Arrowrock Dam and appurtenant works was $4,796,489.00, but repairs and alterations that were made in 1936-1937 added another $600,000.00."
