Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Hollyknowe is a two-and-a-half story brick house built about 1922. It is irregular and asymmetrical in composition, with numerous wings and projections around an essentially square core. Its multi-hipped roof of red tiles projects widely at the eaves and is broken by three hipped dormers and several brick chimneys.

At each corner of the house are one-story wings, which contain screened porches, a sun room and the kitchen. On the rear of the house a one-story screened porch connects the kitchen, on the southwest corner, with the wing on the southeast.

The walls of the house are of tan brick. A concrete water table defines the base of the design. Other elements giving unity and horizontality to the composition are a string course surrounding the house at the level of the second-story window sills, and the wide cornices of the main block and the lower wings. Each window consists of a single-pane lower sash and an upper sash containing a large pane bordered by smaller, narrow panes.

The main entrance to the house is a glass-and-wood door of eighteen panes, flanked by ten-pane sidelights and surmounted by a multipaned transom that arches in a shallow ogee curve. The doorway is protected by a low, segmental-arched canopy which projects from the eave of the adjacent one-story wing.

The interior of the house is finished with classically-derived wood trim that is generally Georgian in character, especially the door and window surrounds and the main staircase, with its slender turned wood balusters. The mantels, however, are not classical, being faced with glazed ceramic square tiles.

The house contains ten bedrooms and six bathrooms. All of the original lighting and plumbing fixtures remain intact.

The area of land included in this nomination is 8.43 acres in extent and includes the house and several outbuildings. East of the house is a two-story garage which reflects the design of the main house. To the southwest of the house are tennis courts and an octagonal, screened summerhouse. A pavilion supported by embellished Ionic columns covers part of the driveway directly in front of the entrance to the house.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Hollyknowe Plantation house is significant locally for its distinctive architectural character. Built about 1922, it is a rare instance for its time of the use of the "modern" stylistic traits of the 1920s for a plantation residence in the architecturally conservative rural areas of the Mississippi Delta. Although houses displaying a similar architectural character were not uncommon in urban areas of the Deep South at that time, Hollyknowe was unique in rural Washington County, where its contemporaries were either substantially less elaborate or were built in much more conservative styles.

Elements derived from the Prairie Style, the Italian Renaissance Revival, and perhaps other sources were combined with a loosely-interpreted free classicism in this very eclectic design by Raymond B. Spencer, an architect from Memphis, Tennessee. Among its Prairie-derived features are its broad hipped roof with wide eaves, its hipped dormers, the string course connecting the sills of the second-story windows, and the patterned upper sashes of the windows. Italian Renaissance Revival features include the tile roof, tan brick walls, and Tuscan columns on the porch. Many of the interior features, especially the main staircase and the door moldings, exhibit a Free Classical character that recalls the Georgian Revival as much as any other source. This combination of features clearly identifies the house as a product of the stylistic movements of the 1920s, suggesting that the design was a deliberate attempt to look modern and up-to-date in contrast to the mid- and late-nineteenth-century architecture of the plantation homes of the surrounding area.

Hollyknowe Plantation house was built during a brief boom in the cotton market, after a long slump, but the market fell again soon thereafter, leaving this house as one of the few testaments to the short period of prosperity in the region. It was built for William Beauregard Swain, (1861–1934) a prominent and successful local planter who created Hollyknowe Plantation from undeveloped woodlands.

This statement reflects current knowledge and is subject to amendment.
