DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located two blocks to the east of Wilmington's main commercial district on Market Street, the Philips-Thompson buildings form the corner of a row of commercial buildings bordering a four-lane street. The buildings face across 4th Street to several blocks of vacant land cleared for urban renewal which are now used as surface parking lots.

The two red brick buildings, laid in a common bond, are three stories tall and have a total of 12 bays across the facade. A row of square decorative terra cotta tiles divides the second and third stories on both the French Street and 4th Street elevations. A decorative corbelled brick cornice surrounds the roof line, which is topped with a carved wooden freize. On the 4th Street side of both buildings, a central carved wooden sunburst surmounts the freize, projecting out slightly. Double-hung two over two windows with ornate brick hood mouldings are evenly spaced on the elevations.

The first floor, or street level, has five recessed entrances with reeded moulding in the architrave around original double wooden doors. The doors all have recessed-panelled lower sections, and glass upper sections framed by an opening with champhered sides. A multi-paned transom surmounts each of these entrances except one, which now holds an air conditioner. Frosted glass transoms are set above the large plate glass display windows.

On the store's interior, pressed tin decoration covers half of the ceiling over the main selling area. What is probably the original counter lines part of one wall of the store. The counter has three recessed panels on its front and angled shelves with windows to display flower bulbs. Ornatelydecorated iron radiators with floral designs and putti figures rest on the hardwood floors which cover the ground floor level. Opposite the sales counter is an original elevator which moves products to the second and third floor storage areas. Reeded wainscoting sheathes part of the interior side and rear walls where original storage bins are located.

The company offices still occupy one wall on the first floor. The offices are separated from the selling area by windows and doors. The original bill collection window still exists.

The buildings maintains its original character, with the exception of the corner located at 4th and French Streets, which has been altered by the addition of concrete blocks to strengthen the corner. New bricks have been added to the facade in several places.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Philips-Thompson Building is significant as a fine example of late 19th century commercial architecture which survives intact, and which still houses the original farm supply business that it was built for.

In the Philips-Thompson Building can be seen many of the finer characteristics of 19th century commercial architecture. The exterior sports handsome brickwork in the various styles of hood moldings over the windows and the corbelled brick cornice. The sunburst decorations capping the central bays are unmatched in Wilmington commercial architecture. On the interior, the decorative tin ceiling and ornately-styled iron radiators are fine examples of the decoration that was found in some 19th century commercial buildings.

The building is also significant for the fact that it houses the only farm supply left in Wilmington. Although Wilmington was for years the wholesale farm supply center of this area, as the suburbs have grown to encompass a larger area, the farms have been pushed further away from the city. Most farm supply businesses have moved from the city to be near the farms. But the Philips-Thompson Company remains, the last of the old farm suppliers left in Wilmington.

The company was begun in 1878 as I. D. Philips, a flour, grain and mill store in Greenbank, Delaware. About 1885, the company relocated to 200 W. 4th Street. According to the 1900 Board of Trade Journal, the Philips Thompson Company was a manufacturers agent and shippers of flour, feed, salt, seeds, grain, hay, and straw. They were also dealers in anthracite coal, and the company maintained a storage warehouse and coalyard at 4th and Church Streets, now demolished. In a 1932 issue of Wilmington, the Chamber of Commerce magazine, a Philips-Thompson Company advertisement listed the company's territory as including the Delmarva Peninsula and southeastern Pennsylvania.

The buildings have simultaneously housed other businesses and organizations in additions to the Philips-Thompson Company. Currently, the Crowe Produce and Seafood Markets occupy 201 and 205 W. 4th Street, respectively. In the late 19th century, wholesale grocers and produce shops, as well as a carter, occupied portions of the buildings. Political and religious groups met in the building, probably upstairs. The Republican Invincible Club, formed in 1890, members of which were some of the most efficient ward and district leaders in Wilmington, had its first home in the Philips-Thompson Building. In 1889, the City Directory lists the reformed Methodist Church at that address, as well as the Knights of St. Lawrence and the Albert Bay Club.

The Philips-Thompson Building is representative of a type of structure not found in modern day architecture - a building built for a mundane commercial use, but embellished with rich architectural features which transcend the structure's ordinary use. Too often modern day commercial architecture tends toward "utilitarian" boxes of sheet metal. The Philips-Thompson Building remains, a reminder of a time when commercial architecture was not only utilitarian but, gracious and even beautiful.
