Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The William N. Violett House is a two-story, red brick structure constructed in the Italianate style. The house is built on a granite foundation which supports 16" thick, brick cavity walls. Floor joists are of 3" x 12" native oak. The structure is in excellent condition with no signs of settling or cracking.

Exterior details of the house which are typical of the Italianate style include: Paired brackets which support the wide, paneled soffit; brick arches at window and door heads; a heavy frieze molding below the cornice brackets; and an elongated circular window in the stairwell.

There are few changes that have affected the exterior appearance of the house. The original wood shingle roof has been replaced or overlaid with asphalt shingles. In an 1874 drawing of this house we find two flat-roofed, wooden porches. These porches have been removed, probably due to deterioration, and replaced with enclosed brick porches.

The house is "T" shaped in plan, with the top of the "T" running parallel to Indiana Highway 15 and forming the front wing of the house. This front portion contains the parlor, entry hall, dining room and library on the first floor. The second floor has a stair hall, bathroom and bedchambers. The rear wing has the kitchen, pantry and rear stairway which leads to servants' quarters on the second floor.

Interior finishes consist of oak hardwood floors, plaster walls and very wide moldings around doors and windows, and at the ceiling and floor. These moldings are of poplar, painted white. All doors are of paneled construction. They are made of pine, painted white, and each has a rectangular glass transom above.

The main entry has double doors, each with 12 glass panes and an arched glass transom light. They lead to the entry hall which has as its focal point an elliptical oak staircase. Natural light is provided by an elongated circular window.

This house was built and occupied by William N. Violett; however, no records exist to show when it was actually built. William N. Violett, and his wife acquired the 210-acre farm on which the house was built for $2,000 in 1854¹. A reasonable estimate may be made by studying a drawing reproduced from the Illustrated Historical Atlas of 1874. This drawing shows the house and surrounding area in very accurate detail. The maturity of landscape plantings would indicate that the house may have been built 20-25 years earlier or during the 1850's, although this evidence is not totally reliable.

A small church-house is also shown to the south of the Violett property and remains in that location today. The property is in a primarily rural setting at the far southern edge of Goshen. The house is set back from the roadway on a large, shady lot. A small brick garage was built to the north of the house between 1910 and 1930. It measures approximately 22 feet square. The hipped roof imitates the style of the roof of the house.

Statement of Significance (In one paragraph)

The William N. Violett House is significant because of its architectural style, as well as its association with the Violett family, who were among the early settlers of Elkhart County. The house, with its high eaveline, carved bracket cornice supports, stringcourse, and segmental brick arches, displays many features of the Italianate style of architecture.

William Violett came from one of the first families to settle in the area. Records show that William Violett arrived in Elkhart County at the age of two years with his parents, Major John Violett and his wife, Chloe. The family settled south of Goshen, near the Elkhart River, in 1828. The Violetts went on to become associated with the earliest development of Elkhart County.

Major Violett and his three sons, Isaac, William, and John, farmed 825 acres on the banks of the Elkhart River, surrounding what is now the town of Waterford Mills. Major Violett's farm was one of the largest in the county. On this property, the Violett Cemetery was laid out (across the highway from this house) where many members of early Elkhart County families are buried. John Violett, younger brother of William, served as sheriff of the county.

William Violett built his impressive farmhouse on a portion of his father's original holdings, probably in the late 1850's. William was something of a gentleman-planter. Well educated, he gained a local reputation as a writer and a poet. He also became known as a reformer because of his advocacy of the temperance cause.

The spaciousness of the home and its distinctive architectural style reflect Violett's position in the community. Violett installed oak hardwood floors, as well as poplar paneling around the doors and windows in the interior of his home. The unique elliptical window which lights the carved, winding staircase is particularly distinctive. Because of these features, the house remains one of the most prominent houses in the area.

Because of its distinctive architectural style and links with one of the oldest families in Elkhart County, the William N. Violett House is one of the most significant houses in the area.
