These are two frame residences with painted trim and natural dark brown Western Red Cedar shingle siding. There are beach rock stone boxes with chimneys also of this masonry material.

The houses are connected by a garden room with an arched passageway below. The 3-car garage of #270 is worthy of note: with brown fir siding and framing.

Light gray composition shingles are on the low-pitched wide overhang roofs. Originally the roofs were cedar shingled, but the pitch was too low to prevent rapid deterioration.

Porch decks have been added later by architect Victor Steinbrueck.

The homes are well maintained although the yard of #270 is quite casual.

Ellsworth Storey much admired the architect Frank Lloyd Wright. homes show a style slightly terivative of Swiss chalets as well as of architect Wright. #260 was Mr. Storey's own residence and the one at #270 was built for his father and mother, both in 1902. These houses are a prime example of Mr. Storey's work, being the first houses that he did after graduating from the University of Illinois. They are a fine example of residential design appropriate to the Puget Sound region. They use native materials and appropriate forms and roofs to fit well into the hillside landscape.

Original and decorative detailing of all woedwork and especially of the wooden windows gives these houses a pleasant quality and appropriate scale. The houses are well composed together and the forms are highly successful. Although the larger house is almost twice the size of the smaller one, it does not dominate it. The highly decorative wooden windows are particularly typical of Mr. Storey's work, The wellweathered cedar shingle exteriors are still an inspiration to today's builders.

The interiors are not equal to the exteriors, although very well planned. Only the fireplaces and stair railings have the design quality of the exteriors. Interiors are entirely plastered except for some remodeling in #270%
