Section 7. Narrative Description

The Fulbright House is a modest one-story stuccoed adobe, built in 1933-34, in Spanish Colonial Revival style. Built on a rectangular plan, the house has high integrity and is one of the only examples of its style in the community and is unique in its use of site materials. Constructed on a three-lot parcel in the central Arizona town of Florence, the house was built on a poured concrete foundation, forming a three-room basement. The earth from the basement excavation was used to construct the adobe blocks for the exterior walls. All the doors and woodwork in the house were custom made on the site.

Although the house lacks some characteristic Spanish Colonial Revival features such as semicircular arches and pergolas, it has the basic stuccoed wall and red tile roof appearance of the style. Plain white exterior walls contrast pleasantly with the red-orange colored curved clay tiles of the moderate pitched gabled roof. A prominent chimney on the south side of the house rises ten feet above the roof and is topped by exposed flue tiles. Decorative round tile pipes, in groups of three, are placed in the gables for attic ventilation. The exterior steel casement windows, enhanced by period dark green awnings, have the 1929 patent seal of their Fenestra Brand construction and all the original brass and copper hardware. The front door is a heavy, thick planked batten, custom door with an oval top and original hardware.

The interior walls are framed in wood and covered with lath and plaster. There are twenty-two interior doors, all with original glass and original brass hardware. Light fixtures throughout the house are also original and are in excellent condition.

A kitchen was added to the south side of the house in 1953 with special attention to compatibility of materials and integrity of the original roof line and style. Henry Jaastad of Tucson drew the plans for the addition. Jaastad, who designed the St. Augustine Cathedral in Tucson, is well known for his architectural work in Arizona.

Attached to the south side of the house and extending around the immediate back yard is a five-foot, stuccoed, adobe block wall that was constructed in the summer of 1934. On the north side of the house are two separate, single car garages. The garage closest to the house is adobe and was built at the same time the house was constructed. The newer garage is compatible in appearance and setback. The concrete driveway is also original and has an interesting feature designed by the owner for his wife: the center is slightly raised to assist her in backing the automobile out of the long driveway.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Built as a private residence for a prominent attorney, the Fulbright House is historically significant under Criterion C as a fine example of the architecture, craftsmanship, and materials used in the construction of Spanish Colonial Revival style houses in Arizona in the first half of the twentieth century. Since its construction in Florence, Arizona, in 1933-34, the house has had only three owners, all preserving and maintaining the building's original materials and craftsmanship.

The county seat of Pinal County, Florence is located in the central section of the state, near the Gila River, one of Arizona's major streams. It was settled in the late 1860s after the Civil War, and was prominent during Arizona's early Territorial period. Florence began with great promise, survived a silver mining "boom and bust" period in the late nineteenth century, endured economic decline as population moved away from the Middle Gila River, and stabilized as an agricultural center after canal irrigation began. Also, Arizona Territorial Prison was relocated to Florence in 1909 and has been a major employer in the community to the present time.

For a number of reasons, Florence has retained the fabric of a Territorial town supplemented by good examples of almost every building tradition or architectural style utilized during Arizona's Territorial and early statehood days. The Fulbright House depicts in a modest way the Spanish Colonial Revival Style, one of the several period revival designs that appeared in Florence between 1913 and 1949. An elaboration of the earlier, simpler Mission style, Spanish Colonial Revival architecture was first exhibited before the American public at the 1915 Panama Pacific Exposition in San Diego. During the 1920s, it became very popular in Arizona, as well as in the other Spanish Borderland states of California, Texas, and Florida, and was a major feature of some Arizona cities. The Fulbright House is the best extant example in Florence of this important style, reminiscient of the deliberate early twentieth century attempt to link American homes to exotic places and times.

Thomas and Edna Fulbright, the first owners of the house, moved to Florence in 1929 when Mr. Fulbright, an attorney, accepted a position as deputy for Pinal County Attorney, Ernest McFarland. After Mr. McFarland was defeated in the 1932 election, he and Mr. Fulbright formed a law partnership. The new partnership received national recognition in April 1933 as the defense attorneys representing the convicted "Trunk Murderess," Winnie Ruth Judd. Judd was scheduled to be executed at the Arizona State Prison the same month as her sanity hearing. Fulbright and McFarland's defense of the alleged murderess was instrumental in having her death sentence commuted to hospitalization for insanity at the Arizona State Hospital. Over her thirty years confinement, Winnie Ruth Judd escaped numerous times from the Arizona State Hospital. She successfully lived in hiding in California for many years before her sentence was eventually commuted in 1971. The Judd case has continued to attract attention and a widely-acclaimed new book was published in 1993.

Mr. Fulbright served later as a local judge, the attorney for the Town of Florence, and headed a private law practice that was a prominent one in central Arizona. In 1968, he wrote an autobiography of his life in Arizona entitled, Cow-County Counselor. McFarland who died in 1984 is remembered as an outstanding leader, serving as Governor of Arizona, United States Senator, and Chief Justice of the Arizona Supreme Court.

Construction on the Fulbrights' new house began in the spring of 1933 in spite of the rigors of the Great Depression. The architectural plans had been ordered by Mr. and Mrs. Fulbright from the Architect's Small House Bureau of the American Institute of Architecture. They contracted with a local rancher and cotton farmer, Archie Bartlett, to construct the house. Later that year, after being elected Pinal County Treasurer, Mr. Bartlett transferred completion of the project to another person. The Fulbrights moved into the house on Valentine's Day, February 14, 1934.
