NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION

The old United State Post Office in Ripley is located in the central business district two blocks north of the Tippah County Courthouse. It is brick vernacular in style. A brick basement rises above grade to the main floor level with no differentiated water table. The elevated main floor is made accessible by a flight of limestone steps with cast iron railings. The exterior walls consist of one full story crowned by a limestone coping above a brick parapet which hides a flat, built-up roof over the whole structure. The street facade consists of four bays reading window-window-door -window-window. The central doorway is articulated by wooden fluted pilasters, a seven-light rectangular transom on architrave with guttae and a cornice with dentils. Windows in this facade are wooden, double-hung, eight over twelve sash with limestone lintels and sills. A mailing vestibule and platform project from the rear (west) elevation. Brick masonry laid in the English bond is used throughout. A full basement level exists.

The interior plan consists of a large public lobby with the old postmaster's office at the southeast corner. The remaining area, that was once a large workroom, has now been divided into office, but the walls are only partial height, allowing the lights and heating to convey the sense of one large workroom. A partial mezzanine level containing a lookout is located over the vault area. The lobby contains a polychrome, glazed tile floor and wainscoting. Additionally, the original wooden screenline and entry vestibule are intact.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Architecture

The old Ripley Post Office, built in 1938, is a locally important work of mid-twentieth century architecture as a brick post office with Colonial Revival influence. It is a well-maintained example of the colonial style post offices built in Mississippi by the Federal Government during the Great Depression. This Post Office building, the City Hall and the Courthouse represent the three most important governmental public buildings within the community. As a prominent architectural landmark near the central business district, it represents not only the Federal presence in Ripley, but also the town's participation in the Union.

The old Ripley Post Office is an excellent of the post offices built under New Deal programs in Mississippi during the 1930s and early 1940s and retain a high degree of integrity.

Politics/Government

The old U.S. Post Office in Ripley, built in 1938, is significant for being one of the thirty-two post offices constructed in Mississippi during the Great Depression with funding from one of the New Deal public building programs, as part of an overall work relief program.

The old Ripley Post Office illustrates how the Federal government through Franklin Delano Roosevelt's leadership transformed its role from one of a "neutral arbiter to social welfare activist", a role the government has retained down to today. Ripley, along with the rest of rural Mississippi, suffered greatly during the Great Depression. The construction of its post office demonstrates how the Federal government sought to alleviate the economic hardships of an American community through work relief while also attempting to inspire and encourage that community through public beautification (Craig 1979-343).
