Summary

The Lincoln School (built 1935) is located along the west side of 9th Street between Massachusetts and Connecticut streets in Elwood, Doniphan County, Kansas. The one-story brick and concrete building faces east, and is within a neighborhood of single-family residences, a community park, and a church. The school building is one of the community's few older buildings, as this area is prone to major floods associated with the nearby Missouri River. As a result, much of this building's historic environs are no longer extant. (Figures 1 & 2)

Elaboration

The Lincoln School is a one-story, free-standing brick and concrete building with a rectangular footprint measuring 89 feet by 57 feet. It faces east toward 9th Street and occupies the northeast one-third of the block. Parking is located along 9th Street directly in front of the building. The building features a flat roof with a parapet topped with tile, the original 16-over-16 wood sash windows, and subtle Art Deco cast stone elements at the entrance and along the front façade. The top sashes of the double-hung windows are obscured on the exterior of the building by metal siding that is attached to the window frames, because the interior ceiling has been lowered. An interior brick chimney (flush with the north and west walls) is located at the building's northwest corner. The building rests on a concrete foundation, and there is no basement.

The building's east elevation features a central entrance and four sets of three windows. The entrance surround, which slightly projects forward, is ornate cut stone with the date 1934, and a pair of modern metal and glass doors provides direct access into the central corridor. The original wood windows are comprised of 16-over-16 double-hung sashes. The lintels above the windows feature a soldier course of brick bookended by brick-size ornate cut stone with an Art Deco motif. Window sills are cast stone. Also on the building's front façade at the southeast and northeast corners are decorative cast stone elements inlaid in the brick.

The north (side) elevation features just four openings concentrated along the west half of the façade. The two outer openings are fixed 16-light wood sashes. The two central openings are full-height 16-over-16 double-hung windows. The brick chimney rises above the roofline at the northwest corner of the building.

The west (rear) elevation has two sets of three windows concentrated in the center of the façade. These are full-height 16-over-16 double-hung windows, though several of the sashes have been boarded to slow deterioration.

The east (side) elevation has two sets of three windows concentrated at the west end of the façade. Each group of windows, like the others throughout the building, feature cast stone sills and soldier course brick lintels.

Interior

The primary entrance leads to a short central corridor that opens into a large multi-purpose space that occupies much of the west half of the building. There are two enclosed classrooms accessed from this large central room – at the building's northeast and southeast corners. Along the north wall at the west corner of the building are two restrooms and a utility closet. Along the south wall at the west corner of the building is an office.

The building features a concrete floor and brick walls. Some walls, particularly in the classrooms, have non-historic wood paneling and sheetrock finishes. A gridded lowered ceiling has been installed throughout the interior – except in the utility closet along the north wall. The southeast classroom is now used for a local library and has been wired for technological upgrades, yet it maintains the basic open floorplan. The alcove where today's librarian's desk is located was once a cloak room. The northeast classroom has a partial kitchen along the north wall. The restrooms were remodeled following the summer 1993 flood of the Missouri River, and the water mark is still visible on the door of the utility closet.

Integrity

The building retains its character-defining features that identify it as a 1930s-era school. The building has witnessed major floods in the mid- and late-20th century, but its brick, cast stone, and concrete materials have withstood the water. Several interior wood doors, a few radiator units and some wood trim have also survived, along with the building's wood windows. The original layout appears to be intact and demonstrates the condition of segregated education in Doniphan County.

(Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

Summary

Lincoln School (built 1935) was the last building in Doniphan County to be used for racially segregated education. The school replaced McKinley School, which burned in 1934, and served African American students in the Elwood area from 1935 until 1955 as a result of the Brown v. Topeka Board of Education U.S. Supreme Court decision in 1954 that outlawed racially segregated educational facilities. The building has withstood two major floods in 1952 and 1993, and is one of the few community landmarks to have survived the floods. In the years after its closure, it served as a community building and library. The building is nominated to the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A for its local significance in the area of Education and African American heritage. It is nominated as part of the Historic Public Schools of Kansas multiple property nomination as an example of the Town Graded Schools property type.

Local History

Elwood is located in Washington Township in the northeast corner of Doniphan County, Kansas, across the Missouri River from St. Joseph, Missouri. It is bordered by the Missouri River on the north, east, and south, and as a result, has been hit hard during major floods. It is approximately 15 miles east of Troy, the county seat. This area was settled early in the history of Kansas Territory, which opened for settlement in 1854. The Roseport Town Company laid out the townsite in the summer of 1856. Originally known as Roseport, the town had a station on the St. Joe and Western Railroad.¹ Those associated with the Roseport Town Company disbanded, and the settlement reorganized as Elwood in 1857, only to disband at the onset of the American Civil War in 1861.² It was not until 1876 that Elwood reorganized and once again held local elections. Elwood's population was relatively steady at between 600 and 700 residents from 1880 to 1910.³

Traditional 19th and 20th century county histories provide little information on the area's African American community. Blacks are known to have settled in Doniphan County soon after the Kansas Territory opened for settlement in 1854, and their settlement is illustrated in Doniphan County's built environment. To date, one building associated exclusively with the county's black population has been listed in the National Register of Historic Places – St. Martha's AME Church and Parsonage.⁴ In the nomination, author Deon Wolfenbarger highlights one of the county's earliest black families was that of Nancy Pennel, a slave in North Carolina, who had been freed in 1856 when her owner died. According to Wolfenbarger, "She was left with funds to purchase land in a free state. The administrator of the will purchased land for the Pennel family in 1859- '60 generally northwest of Troy." Her descendants were associated with St. Martha's AME Church.⁵

In the late 19th and early 20th centuries, there were "colored" schools in Highland, Wathena, White Cloud, and Troy.⁶ According to Wolfenbarger, "School buildings for African Americans were noted in the [1916] publication [Illustrated Doniphan County], usually only in context of when buildings were turned over for the use of black students at the time a better school was built for the white children."⁷ This very scenario played out in White Cloud in 1872 and Wathena in 1879.⁸ Most all-black schools known to have operated in Doniphan County were located in towns, "although one rural school in the old Arnold district (school district 31) for black children was noted to have existed in 1871 with a Mrs. Nilbung serving as teacher."⁹

Although the documented history of the education of the county's black children between 1854 and the end of segregation in 1954 remains incomplete, the following story of Elwood's McKinley and Lincoln schools fills in some of that previously undocumented past.

School History

The Elwood school district organized in 1858, and for many years included two buildings each with two classrooms. One building served the education of white students and the other was for local African American students.

Lincoln School was built on the site of the former McKinley School, which served Elwood's black students and burned in mid-October 1934.¹⁰ The Wathena Times reported that the fire at McKinley School was of a suspicious origin, and that a reward had been posted for tips leading to the arrest of the arsonists. Sixty-five students, under the direction of two teachers, were attending the school at the time of the fire. Immediately after the fire, the students attended class at the Elwood City Hall.¹¹

Plans for the new school called for the construction of a $12,000 brick building at the same location. The Wathena Times noted the architect hired was Harry Wagenknecht and that Farmers Grain and Lumber Company furnished materials.¹² Despite the quick effort to set in motion plans to rebuild the school, construction was delayed by weather and other circumstances until late spring 1935.¹³ The school was named in honor of Abraham Lincoln, who visited Elwood on November 30, 1859 and stayed in nearby Troy on December 1, 1859.

Lincoln School was used for the education of African American students beginning in September 1935 until May 1955. During these years, the school averaged just over 50 students per year, with a peak of 65 during the 1936-1937 academic year.¹⁴ Students in grades one through eight were educated at Lincoln School. It is somewhat unclear when the Elwood High School was integrated, though it may have been as early as 1916.¹⁵ Recent interviews of former students indicate grades one through eight were attending Lincoln School throughout the 1940s and 1950s.¹⁶ The Wathena Times reported that at the time of desegregation in 1955, black high school students were already attending the local high school alongside white students.¹⁷ The long-time teacher of secondary students, William H. Brady, had resigned shortly before the school closed due to declining health, and he died a short time later. His absence left just one teacher, Grace Hooe, teaching the remaining primary students. Prior to this, primary students were taught by Hester Paul Jones from 1931 to 1944 and Mattie G. Page from 1945 to 1954.¹⁸

The community of Elwood was significantly impacted by flooding in 1952, as were many communities along the Missouri River in northeast Kansas and northwest Missouri. Most buildings in town were flooded, including Lincoln School, though the extent of damage to the building is not known. It was again affected by flooding in 1993, the effects of which can still be seen in Lincoln School.

On May 17, 1954, the U.S. Supreme Court announced its landmark decision in the case Brown v. Topeka Board of Education that overturned the Separate but Equal doctrine established by Plessy v. Ferguson in 1896. The Wathena Times, gave only this four-sentence reaction to the decision:

Elwood's is the only school in Doniphan county which will be affected by the supreme court's decision outlawing segregation of white and colored students. Elwood operates a colored grade school. It was planned to have but one teacher next term as there are colored students in the first six grades. Colored and white students attend the high school together.¹⁹

The final year of public school classes held at Lincoln School was 1954-1955. The Wathena Times listed the final 15 students to attend school in the building, taught by Grace Hooe: Norma Munroe, Roger Watson, Bonita Butcher, Karen Hayes, Maurice Massey, Phyllis Cochran, Hamilton Terrell, Brenda Vaughn, Billie Davis, Richard Massey, Vernon Terrell, Larry Watson, Don Cochran, Anita Parker, and Preston Roseby.²⁰

For some historic context on public school segregation in Kansas, the following is excerpted from the "Historic Public Schools of Kansas" National Register multiple property nomination:²¹

The first schools in the area (pre-dating the Territorial period) were schools in which white students were taught along side [American] Indian children at missions in Wyandotte and Council Grove. Although pro-slavery factions fought against the use of tax dollars to support free education for the Negroes, early settlers spoke with nearly unanimous voice, demanding free education for all.²² The laws of the First Territorial Legislature in 1855 established "...schools...free for every class of white citizen...; the laws of 1858 provided no exclusion because of color...school districts established shall be free...to all children..."²³ In the early years of statehood integration was an issue; in 1867 it was made an offense for school officers to exclude colored children and in 1868, State Superintendent

McVicar called for school integration, "the only course worthy of a free people."²⁴ Despite the intentions of the state's forefathers, segregation became the norm. Later legislation actually allow[ed] for segregation in larger cities. Cities built neighborhood schools and therefore most cities had schools specifically for black children, located in black neighborhoods. The issue of school segregation gained national attention and was ultimately resolved by the Brown v. Topeka Board of Education case in 1954.

The following is excerpted from the "Sumner and Monroe Elementary Schools" National Register nomination.²⁵

At the center of the struggle for equal civil rights was the [U.S. Supreme Court] case of Plessy v. Ferguson, (1896), in which the Supreme Court established the doctrine of separate but equal in the use of public transportation facilities. While the Plessy decision itself did not involve the issue of schools, the principle carried over. The segregation of whites and blacks was valid, if the facilities were equal, since it is the "equal" protection of the laws that is guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment...During the forty-year period after 1914, the Court, applying ever more rigid standards of equality, began to find that Negro plaintiffs were being denied equality of treatment as specified in the Plessy decision...By the fall of 1952 the Supreme Court had on its docket cases from four states, Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia, and Delaware, and from the District of Columbia, challenging the constitutionality of racial segregation in public schools...The five cases were argued before the Court in December 1952. The death of Chief Justice [Fred M.] Vinson caused the cases to be reargued in December 1953, after the appointment of Earl Warren as Chief Justice. On May 17, 1954, the Court issued its historic decision in which it concluded that "Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal." After sixty years, Plessy v. Ferguson was overturned.

Lincoln School was the only still-functioning segregated school in Doniphan County at the time of the Brown v. Topeka Board of Education.²⁶

The building sat vacant for several years after the last classes moved out in May 1955. Beginning in 1966, the local school district used the building for the town's first public Kindergarten class, which was taught by Dorothy Turner. The Kindergarten, which was the first desegregated class at Lincoln School, originally was located in the school's south room. Summer classes of the Head Start program were held in the building for several years beginning in 1967. Beginning in 1970, the Community Action Program for Doniphan County used the north classroom and gymnasium for a community center. In the late 1970s, the north classroom was leased to the Area Agency on Aging for use by senior citizens and disabled persons. The Kindergarten class moved out of the south classroom in 1978 and the space was leased to Doniphan County Library District #1 for use as a branch library for the citizens of Elwood. It was run by Hester Chambers Hoggaret. In 1998, the Doniphan County Educational Cooperative, a special education provider for all school districts in Doniphan County, began opened an Alternative At-Risk classroom in the building. Today, the building continues to house the local library.

Historic preservation consultant Deon Wolfenbarger completed a survey of historic resources in Doniphan County in 1998 and 1999. The report of her findings identified five properties that were, at that time, potentially eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places. In addition to Lincoln School, potentially eligible buildings included the Bethel AME Church (demolished), Elwood City Hall, Standard Oil Gas Station, and a private residence.²⁷
