Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Cook House, a raised Greek Revival cottage, erected in 1866, is situated on a verdant parcel with stately magnolias at 222 Extension Street in Hazlehurst, Mississippi. Reputed to be the only Greek Revival cottage in the municipality, it is embedded in a block, opposite a twentieth-century commercial area, distinguished by a preponderance of turn-of-the-century buildings. Divided into five bays, the Cook House has two stories, the bottom one of which is not fully expressed on the front facade. Crowned by a hipped roof covered with asphalt shingles (originally cypress-shingled), two corbeled/denticulated chimneys flank the modest ridge, piercing the centers of the gently-pitched side slopes.

The bottom story, or garden level is constructed of hand-made bricks, like the plaster-covered interior walls, and is lighted by double-hung sash windows. The center-bay entrance to this level, concealed by the eight-step approach to the principal entrance, is a single-leaf door emphasized by sidelights. The rear elevation, on which the first story is fully exposed, is punctuated by six-over-six double-hung windows, and is served by a six-panel door set in a simple enframingent.

The second or principal level--framed of hand-hewn, heart-pine timbers with pegged, mortise-and-tenon joints--is clearly articulated by the vocabulary of the Greek Revival idiom. Box columns, a simply-molded entablature, and a flush-board, cornice-framed tympanum constitute the central, one-bay portico. The primary entrance, which is set between pilasters, is a four-panel door accentuated by a transom, sidelights and a shouldered-architrave surround. Piercing the heart-pine clapboard fabric are six-over-six double-hung windows capped by cornice windowheads and flanked by the original exterior blinds. Surmounting the enriched window surrounds is the aforementioned entablature, a feature which wraps around the entire building. Projecting from the rear elevation is a gallery, enclosed in 1927, and two unheated cabinet rooms. This appendage, elevated on posts which rest upon brick pedestals, is topped by a shed roof.

The interior configuration, a double-pile plan, incorporates eight rooms, four on each level, and two front-to-back hallways. Measuring eighteen feet by eighteen feet, the four front rooms are slightly larger than their rear counterparts whose dimensions are eighteen feet by sixteen feet. Ceilings reach a height of twelve feet on the primary level. Eight fireplaces, one in each principal space, are serviced by the two previously-mentioned, interior chimneys. A kitchen-eating area and a bathroom fill the rear enclosure.

To adapt the structure for modern conveniences, the current owner has engaged an architect to minimally modify the subordinate level in a manner which retains the original configuration. Further, plans are being developed to rebuild the carriage house, and restore the cistern-bath area, the latter component of which was equipped originally with tubs fashioned out of heavy tin.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Cook House is architecturally significant as a fine example of a post-Civil War raised Greek Revival cottage, and is notable as the sole remaining Greek Revival residence within the environs of Hazlehurst. It is also significant as the residence of Edwin Gray Cook, a civic-minded Warren and Copiah County citizen.

During the flush times of Mississippi's ante-bellum years, the Greek Revival style flourished throughout the state. The cottage form of the idiom was built almost everywhere, from the prosperous plantation societies of Natchez and Columbus to the nascent railroad communities of Magnolia and Hazlehurst in South Mississippi. In the rural areas of the state, these simple cottages usually exhibited some sophisticated elements, whether in the frontispiece, window surrounds, colonnade or interior woodwork. The Cook House, notable for being constructed during the economically depressed post-war years, expresses an eloquent combination of the simple, strong form of the Greek Revival cottage, and the detailed decorative elements found among Mississippi's more elaborate Greek Revival mansions. Furthermore, as a raised cottage with a one-bay, pedimented entrance, the Cook House assumes an architectural sophistication which differs from most one-story, five-bay Greek Revival cottages.

Hazlehurst, located approximately thirty-two miles south of Jackson, became prominent in the 1860's as a station along the New Orleans, Jackson & Great Northern Railroad. The city received its charter in 1865, and seven years later became the county seat (James F. Brieger, compiler and publisher, Hometown Mississippi, 1980, p. 116). Among the men attracted to this up-and-coming railroad town was Edwin Grey Cook. Born in Virginia in 1810, Cook and his parents settled in Warren County, Mississippi, during his early childhood. In 1835, Cook married Henrietta V. Harris of Warren County, and a few years later he constructed a residence in Vicksburg for his growing family. Following the death of his first wife, Cook married Olivia Mosley Curtis in 1856 (Copiah County (Mississippi) Courier News, undated article).

Although Cook has been referred to as both "Reverend" and "Colonel," his formal education and training is unascertainable. By 1860, however, the United States Census listed him as a planter (Copiah County (Mississippi) Courier News, undated article).

During the Civil War Cook served as Treasurer of Vicksburg, and President of the Board of Police (Supervisors) of Warren County (Daily Vicksburg, Ms. Commercial Herald, October 10, 1894). After the fall of Vicksburg in 1863, Cook relocated his family to Copiah County, where he preached regularly to the congregation of the Hazlehurst Methodist Episcopal Church (J. B. Cain, Hazlehurst Methodist Church 1860-1960 Nashville: The Parthenon Press, n.d., n.p.).

8 - SIGNIFICANCE

After the war, Cook constructed a permanent residence and school building in Hazlehurst. The school building, located behind the residence, was supervised by Nellie Curtiss, Cook's sister-in-law. Curtiss directed the school, and "taught, for a number of years, a select number of pupils from the leading families of Hazlehurst and adjoining towns." As a result, the Cook Home became "the clearing house of education and social life of the early days of Hazlehurst" (Copiah County (Mississippi) Courier News, undated article).

Edwin Grey Cook died in 1894. After the death of Olive Cook in 1901, the Cook House was sold out of the family. After a succession of owners, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Metts purchased the Cook House in 1978, and initiated a full restoration of the historic house.
