DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This Fortification along with three nearby forts constructed by the Confederate Army in 1863, appears to be of the same configuration as described in Howell and Elizabeth Purdue's recent book entitled, "Pat Cleburne - Confederate General" (Page 203 attached). The Fort being recommended, is located on Government property approximately 200 feet semi-oval on a slight elevation overlooking the East Tennessee and Georgia Railroad it was built to protect. The earthen breastworks described by the Purdue's as twelve feet in height, have been reduced through erosion to about 10 feet but are readily identifiable today. From historical records, each Fort was equipped with six Parrot gung and rifle pits immediately in front of the breastworks. From the existing openings in the structures, it may be assumed the field pieces were located at these points. The original earth floor grade has been built up through the years possibly from decaying vegetable matter, erosion and dumping waste materials. Several large trees have voluntarily grown around the structure and were allowed to remain. The smaller growth and underbrush has been recently removed by Volunteer Army Ammunition Plant work forces.

The land is ideally suited for park area as is.

The area has been cleared within the past three months and is being mowed two or three times per growing season.

The area across the street has been upgraded by the Army Reserve in conjunction with construction of new and modern center.

Further upgrading and beautification of adjacent land has been asked for in a letter from VAAP to the US Army Reserve , dated 24 February 1975.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

1. The Fortification located on Government property was one of four constructed in the Tyner area for the defense of the nearby East Tennessee and Georgia Railroad and Chattanooga, Tennessee.

2. Tyner Station was located approximately 800 feet from the Fortification. The Fortification was the closet of the four to Tyner Station.

3. Generals Longstreet and Cleburne of the Confederate Army used the Tyner Station as their headquarters during the Summer and Fall of 1863.

Tyner Station was Headquarters of Longstreet's Corps after the battle of Chickamauga, as evidenced by the attached letter from Longstreet to Bragg recently discovered in archives of University of Tennessee at Chattanooga Library.

Approximately 13,000 soldiers were stationed in this locality prior to the battle of Missionary Ridge in November 1863. Specifically one Regiment of Wood's Brigade, the 32nd Mississippi is referred to in the book, "Pat Cleburne - Confederate General".

6. The Fortification is the only one located on Government-owned property. Two of the remaining three forts on privately-owned lands have been partially or completely obliterated.

7. The East Tennessee and Georgia Railroad interconnecting Knoxville, Chattanooga and Atlanta was of extreme military importance to both the North and South during the Civil War for the transportation of troops, supplies and munitions.

3. Book entitled, "Pat Cleburne - Confederate General" by Howell and Elizabeth Purdue, dated 1973, page 203 (copy attached) which states, "To defend the railroads and the approach to Chattanooga, Cleburne immediately began constructing four large, round forts in and near Tyner's Station. Twelve feet high and 200 to 300 feet in diameter, with embrasures for cannon and openings for rifles, the forts were surrounded by rifle pits." Traces of three of these Fortifications are still discernible. (Exhibit No. 2)
