The Riverside Baptist Church, erected in 1925, is an octagonal structure of grey limestone blocks with a red tile roof. Structurally, the main body of the building is supported and carried by steel trusses with eight inch cypress beams beneath which are exposed on the interior. The roof of the nave and transept is carried on wood trusses with rafters beneath. The entire foundation is of brick laid on concrete footings and all flooring is concrete. the auditorium, baptistry and corridors Spanish tile has been laid over the concrete and in the choir wood flooring has been laid. The exterior walls of the building are covered with stucco and the interior walls are plastered. The walls were marked off while still wet to achieve the effect of aging.

The floorplan of the building forms a Greek Cross with a layout of rooms grouped around the octagonal nave. Bays extend from four sides of the octagon giving it the cross structure. An ambulatory goes all the way around the interior and a central aisle extends from the apse to the groin vaulted narthex in the east portico. The east bay serves as the main entrance to the church and has double doors of carved pecky cypress with a carved tympanum above. Above the tympanum the wall is pierced with three arched windows carried on miniature columns. The total effect of the east wall is a three part division of doors, tympanum and windows flanked by giant pilasters and subsidiary The north and south bays are lower with the entrances. wall surface divided in half. Below are the carved double doors with their Greek Cross motif and above large radial windows, the spokes of which are tiny columns whose capitals are replicas of interior supporting columns. Fenestration occurs in the octagon walls on the four sides left free of projecting bays and in each case are the arched windows in groups of three. Directly below these are grouped three blind arches. The main ornamentation throughout is cast stone and includes all columns, window and door trim and capitals.

On the interior, the effect of height has not been achieved, perhaps due to the fact that the dome is carried directly on the side walls of the octagon with no subsidiary vaulting. There is, consequently, a feeling of leaviness about the building. An illuminated zone at the of the nave walls lights the base of the dome and gives the structure its only real feeling of lightness. The nave walls at either side of the apsidal opening are pierced and have three arches carried on columns with ornamental iron that the light occupies the space immediately above the narthex. High on each of the 8 walls scriptural phrases have been

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE	-

Addison Mizner, whose sphere of influence stems from the architecture which he did in Palm Beach and Boca Raton in the 1920's was a man reputed to be only vaguely interested in matters pertaining to religion. However, in a 1925 letter to his brother, the Reverend Henry Mizner, Addison stated that he and another brother Wilson had decided "that the best thing to do would be to build a Cathedral of the Madonna in memory of Mamma Mizner." Apparently, Mizner originally intended that this "cathedral" should be located in the millionaires' colony at Boca Raton and should be taken over by the Episcopal Church with a construction cost of two or three million This plan never did materialize, but in 1924, at the height of Mizner's popularity, he was approached by Dr. H. Marshall Taylor of Jacksonville concerning the designing of another church. Members of the building committee of the Riverside Baptist Church under the leadership and influence of Dr. Taylor agreed to approach Mizner with their meager funds requesting that he design a new church for the then small congregation. Perhaps remembering his promise to his mother or perhaps challenged by the idea of building a religious structure, Mizner agreed to design the church and accepting no fee, to carry it through to completion.

Located on the southeast corner of King and Park Streets in the Riverside section of Jacksonville, the church is an impressive structure from any angle. Built of grey limestone blocks with a red tile roof, the building embodies features of three major types of architecture: Romanesque, Byzantine and Spanish. The rather eclectic nature of the building is typical of Mizner's architectural style, one for which he was severly criticized by many. In the case of the Riverside Church, however, the design would seem to be more an intelligent adaptation of preexisting styles. Careful study on the part of the architect regarding the play of light and shadow and the position of the sun at certain times of the day produced an almost perfect natural lighting of the interior. During morning services the sun filters through an amber tinted window suffusing a golden light over the congregation. Mizner further placed blue glass in the side windows transforming the sunlight into soft blue illumination at a later time of Despite the great care which Mizner took to create a beautiful church there were many in the congregation who were displeased with the general style of the building, feeling that it resembled more an Episcopal or Catholic church. On these grounds some of the congregation was lost. true that in the history of Baptist architecture the Riverside Church is a complete break with tradition in both style and iconography. During the cornerstone laying ceremonies on January 25, 1926, the speaker said, "I do not know of a church quite so remarkable as this gem of architecture." The building speaks for itself as a tribute to the genius of Addison Mizner.
