Summary Paragraph

The Herman and Allene Shaver House, a one-story brick house in the small community of Wayside in Jones County in central Georgia, served as a seasonal residence for the Shaver family from 1936 until 1950. Designed by Macon architect Ellamae Ellis League in 1936, the Shaver house is a one-story rustic-style house with a two-story bedroom wing. The exterior is clad in mottled red brick. The U-shaped plan is organized around the living room, with bedroom and kitchen wings, which enclose a rear terrace. The living room, the largest room in the house, includes a fireplace, lattice and one-over-one sash windows, and double-height ceilings supported by hewn king-post trusses. The living room includes an open stair to the second-floor bedroom at one end and at the other it opens onto the dining room. The rustic-style interior is seen in the exposed brick walls, cypress paneling, hewn beams, and cast- and wrought-iron hinges, handrails, and other fittings. In the 1990s, the property owners made alterations to the house and property, including the addition of a front stoop, the enclosing of the garage and arcaded loggia, remodeling the kitchen, adding a rear den, converting the two second-floor bedrooms into one bedroom suite, and building a free-standing garage, swimming pool, barbeque terrace, and brick garden walls. The property also includes a historic pump house and a one-story, two-room, brick guest cottage, which was designed by Ellamae Ellis League in 1936.

Narrative Description

The Shaver house is a rustic-style, one-story house with a two-story bedroom wing designed by Ellamae Ellis League and completed in 1936. The house is located in central Georgia in the rural community of Wayside, five miles north of Gray in Jones County, Georgia. The house is located on a wooded lot and faces northeast towards the main road. It is part of a complex that includes a one-story brick guest house, also designed by Ellamae Ellis League and completed in 1936, and a brick pump house. The house is located opposite the remaining warehouse of the Georgia Canning Company, which was owned by the Shaver family until it closed in the 1950s.

The exterior of the house is mostly clad in brick and faces northeast toward Monticello Highway, the railroad line, and the remaining warehouse of the Georgia Canning Company, which was owned and operated by the Shaver family (photos 1-3). The main block, which houses the living room, is covered with a side-gabled roof and features a small entrance portico (photo 2). The wood-paneled front door features wrought-iron hardware. The tall window sashes are placed at nearly ground level. The brick walls are formed with mottled red brick. On the southeast side of the main block is a two-story bedroom wing. The first floor is mottled brick; the second floor is covered with board-and-batten siding. Northwest of the main block is the dining room-and-kitchen wing, indicated by the bay window (photo 4 with dining room, left, and garage, right). This wing is joined by the garage and an arcaded passage, which has been enclosed (photo 3, far right). Doors throughout are heavy vertical-plank doors with wrought-iron hardware and studded with rose-headed nails (photos 11, 14).

The U-shaped plan is organized around the living room, designed as an entertainment space for the Shaver family. The bedroom wing and the dining room-and-kitchen wing enclose a rear terrace, recently covered with a wood trellis. A shed-roofed porch, located along the back of the wall, joins both wings. A pool and barbeque are located in the rear yard.

The living room, the main room of the house, features exposed brick walls and vaulted ceilings supported by king-post trusses (photos 12-15). The hand-hewn trusses are joined by wrought-iron straps and supported by iron rods. The fireplace is original, although the mantel was added in the 1990s. The living room is the physical and symbolic center of the house. It opens onto the rear loggia for outdoor entertaining. The southwest side of the living room provides access to the bedroom wing. The northeast side opens to the dining-and-kitchen wing.

The dining room features exposed brick walls, hewn beam ceilings, and a bay at the northwest end (photo 16). The kitchen was remodeled in the 1990s, when a rear den was added.

The two-story bedroom wing features a narrow corridor and two bedrooms (photo 17). The bedrooms, which are joined by a bathroom, are lined with cypress paneling (photos 18, 21). The doors feature wrought-iron thumb latches and door pulls (photos 19-20). In the 1990s, the second floor, which originally included two bedrooms, was reconfigured to serve as a one-room bedroom suite (photo 22).

The rear loggia was essential to the Shavers for outdoor entertaining (photo 7). It is enclosed on three sides by the living room, bedroom wing, and kitchen wing. A covered walk is located on the length of the living room wall. It is supported with brick piers and exposed beams (photo 10). The loggia was extended by the addition of a pergola and brick terrace laid in a herringbone pattern (photos 8-9).

The Shaver property also includes a guest house, which was designed by Ellamae Ellis League and completed in 1936 (photo 23). The one-story brick guest house featured two rooms with a fireplace. Two additional rooms have been added in the form of wood-frame rear ell. The property also includes a brick pump house with a gable-front entrance (photo 24). The brick posts that flank the entrance drive also were constructed during the Shaver period of occupancy (photo 25).

In the 1990s, numerous additions were made to the house and property. These additions include a three-car garage, pool, brick-paved terrace, barbeque, garden walls, the enclosing of the

The Herman and Allene Shaver House is significant in the area of architecture as an excellent example of a rustic-style seasonal residence designed for hosting social gatherings of family and friends as seen in its large living room, adjoining dining room, and rear terrace. The casual rustic-style interior includes exposed brick walls, cypress paneling, hewn woodwork, and cast- and wrought-iron hardware. The Shaver house is an early work of Ellamae Ellis League, a pioneering woman in the architectural profession in the South. League ran her own successful architectural practice in Macon, Georgia, from 1934 to 1975. Her firm was one of the largest in Macon, unusual not only for a woman architect, but for architectural firms in general, most of which were one- or two-person operations. League was one of Macon's most prominent architects of the 20th century and the first Georgia woman selected as a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

The Herman and Allene Shaver House is significant in the area of architecture at the local level under National Register Criterion C because the 1936 house is an outstanding example of a rustic-style seasonal residence in rural Georgia. The rustic style, which was seldom built in Georgia, derives from the 19th-century work of Frederick Law Olmsted, Calvert Vaux, and H. H. Richardson, who were inspired by the landscape and used natural forms and materials to replace expected architectural details. The rustic style is characterized by the use of oversize rocks and boulders and hewn and unhewn logs. The style is closely associated with the dozens of camps that were built for wealthy industrialists in the Adirondack Mountains of upstate New York. Among the most influential builders in the New York area was William West Durant, who built numerous rustic-style camps in the last quarter of the 19th century. Among his best-known camps are Sagamore, Camp Uncas, and Camp Pine Knot, all built on Racquette Lake in Hamilton County, New York. Later, the rustic style was used extensively by the Civilian Conservation Corps in state and national parks, most famously in the lodges at western national parks, such as Glacier and Yellowstone.

In Georgia, few houses were built in the rustic style. Among the rare examples is the Island Ford Lodge, also known as the Hewlett Lodge, which serves now as the administrative headquarters for the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area in Fulton County. Built c.1935 above the Chattahoochee River, the sprawling T-shaped house is built of pine logs and includes a massive stone fireplace and a beamed ceiling in the great room.

The Cason and Virginia Callaway Homeplace in Harris County is an excellent example of a rustic-style house in Georgia because its design derives from natural materials, locally quarried granite and the unhewn pine logs from trees felled on the property. Designed by the Atlanta firm of Ivey and Crook, the foundation, steps, and fireplaces are built of granite. Saddle-notched pine logs cover the exterior of the building and remain exposed on the interior. Unhewn logs are used throughout the house in place of traditional architectural details, such as mantels, balusters, railings, and chandeliers. Built on a grand scale, the Callaway homeplace is akin to the Adirondack lodges with its sprawling exterior form and its living room, or great room that includes a full-height ceiling with open trusses, balconies, and two massive stone fireplaces. The Cason and Virginia Callaway Homeplace was listed in the National Register in 2002.

Shaver, Herman and Allene, House
Name of Property

County and State

Most rustic-style buildings in Georgia were nonresidential and were funded by New Deal-era programs. The Cornelia Community House in Cornelia, Habersham County, was designed by Atlanta architect David S. Cuttino in 1936. Funded by the Works Progress Administration (WPA), the community house is built with brick and stone and unhewn pine logs. The hall features a full-height ceiling with exposed log trusses and a massive stone fireplace.

Numerous state parks in Georgia were built with Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC) labor, including Alexander H. Stephens Memorial State Park in Taliaferro County, which was listed in the National Register in 1995. In the 1930s, the CCC built a bathhouse, shelters and granite benches and barbecue pits on this 1,200-acre camping and recreational facility. Later, the WPA funded the construction of rustic cabins, a dining hall, an amphitheater, and other ancillary buildings at the park. More than any individual building, these resources are part of a rustic landscape that includes rock-faced granite paths, benches, walls, steps, and other rustic landscape features.

The Herman and Allene Shaver House is an excellent example of a rustic-style house, which was designed primarily for social gatherings of the Shaver's family, friends, and business associates. This is evident by the large, centrally located living room, adjoining dining room, and rear terrace. The large windows and multiple doors leading from the interior to adjacent exterior spaces reinforce the living room's role as the social center of the plan. Its casual rustic design is reinforced by rustic details such as exposed brick walls, the use of cypress paneling, hewn king-post cypress trusses, and cast- and wrought-iron hardware. The walls of the bedroom are paneled in cypress sheathing. The rear loggia, which provided casual space for outdoor entertaining, includes a covered passage supported by brick piers and wood beams.

The Shaver house was designed by Macon architect Ellamae Ellis League, a pioneering woman in the architectural profession in the South, who ran her own successful architectural practice in Macon, Georgia, for more than 40 years (1934-1975). The profession of architecture represented a new career opportunity for women in the early to mid-20th century, and League was a precedent setter in this newly opened field for women. League's firm was one of the largest in Macon, unusual not only for a woman architect, but for architectural firms in general, most of which were one- or two-person operations. During a time in Georgia where few women owned their own businesses, League successfully ran her own business as well as being a principal architect and served as a pioneer and influence to other women who pursued professional careers.

The success of her firm and her long career underscores League's significance in the architectural profession not only in architecture in Georgia and the South, but in the larger professional world. Women architects often specialized, or were expected to specialize, in domestic design as they were believed to have a better "feel" for that area. League, along with a few other women architects, notably Julia Morgan of California, preferred to design complex buildings, such as schools, churches, and hospitals, as well as houses. League also was involved in rehabilitation work. Her best-known rehabilitation was the Grand Opera House in Macon, undertaken in the late 1960s and one of her last major projects. League was one of Macon's most prominent architects of the 20th century and the first Georgia woman selected as a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects.

County and State

Developmental history/additional historic context information

Herman and Allene Shaver were drawn to the community of Wayside, Georgia, by the abundant peach orchards of Jones County and the railroad line, which ran through the community. Herman Shaver, born in 1886 in Virginia, was a wholesale canner based in Florida. Initially based in Jacksonville, Shaver established a fruit canning business in Lakeland, Florida by 1930. By the mid-1930s, Shaver and his wife sought to expand their business and established the Georgia Canning Company in Wayside to take advantage of the local peach-growing economy. The Shavers spent winters in Lakeland, overseeing their orange-juice processing plants. In Wayside, across the railroad line from their new home, they operated their packing plant, which canned peppers, peaches, beans, peas, and tomatoes. The Shavers usually arrived in Wayside in early summer and returned to Florida in the fall. In addition to managing their Wayside packing house, the couple entertained family and friends in their one-story brick house. The Shavers, who had no children, were assisted in their business by Herman's brother, Dave, whose family lived in a wood cottage (no longer extant) on the Shaver's property. Dave's son, Carroll, lived in the Shaver's small brick guest house. Eventually, the Shavers turned over the Wayside operation to Carroll and his brother, Vernon. The Georgia Canning Company was foreclosed upon in the mid-1950s. The company's warehouse and loading docks along the railroad remain, opposite the Shaver house in Wayside, Georgia.

The growth and success of the Georgia Canning Company in the midst of the Great Depression allowed the Shavers to commission Ellamae Ellis League to design a summer house from 1935 to 1936 for seasonal use and social gatherings. Ellamae Ellis League was a Macon, Georgia, architect, who apprenticed with local Macon architectural firms for six years while taking correspondence courses in architecture from the Beaux-Arts Institute of Design in New York City. She also attended the Ecole des Beaux-Arts in France from 1927 to 1928. Following her education in France, she continued to work as an apprentice until 1934, when she established her independent practice in Macon.

The Shaver house, which was completed in 1936, served as a seasonal residence for the Shavers, who retained their Lakeland home as their primary residence. The Shavers would travel to Wayside in early summer and stay until the fall, when they returned to Florida. While in Wayside, they entertained family, friends, and business associates. The Shavers maintained ownership of the house until 1947, when Herman Shaver died. The ownership of the house passed to relatives, who also assumed the operation and management of the Georgia Canning Company. Allene Shaver continued to reside in the family's primary residence in Lakeland until after 1959. By the mid-1950s, the Georgia Canning Company ceased operation, and the house, no longer used by the Shavers, fell into disrepair.

In the 1990s, new owners purchased the house, which they rehabilitated. The work was guided by League's blueprints for the house, which are in the possession of the owners, who sought to preserve the historic character-defining features of the house. The rehabilitation included the addition of a free-standing three-car garage, pool, brick-paved terrace, barbeque, garden walls, the enclosing of the arcaded loggia, conversion of the garage to a library, remodeling the kitchen, addition of a rear den, and the consolidation of the two second-floor bedrooms into a single bedroom suite.
