DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Hubbardton Battlefield is located in the hills of west central Vermont. The Battlefield and the surrounding area of immediate importance consists of approximately 1500 acres. At present the only buildings within the Battlefield site are 1 farm house and outbuildings, owned by the State of Vermont, and a building which was formerly the Hubbardton one room schoolhouse. The schoolhouse is scheduled for acquisition by the State ofVermont. The farm house and buildings will be removed from the site after the demise of the present tenant who was formerly the owner. Future plans for the site include the construction of the visitors' reception center and museum and the restoration of the Selleck Log Cabin which served as the American command post during the battle. The general area of the battle ground is bounded on the south, east, and north by high wooded ridge lines and on the west by rolling hills and woodlands. leveloped by date

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

In the green hills of East Hubbardton, during the early morning hours of July 7, 1777 there was fought one of the most successful rear guard actions in the annals of American military history. It was the only battle of the American Revolution which took place entirely on Vermont soil.

Gen. Arthur St. Clair, retreating from Fort Ticonderoga, had left at Hubbardton a few hundred men from his rear guard unit, with orders to slow the British pursuit as much as possible. By this maneuver, St. Clair hoped to make good the escape eastward, of his weary and tattered main army.

The small force remaining at Hubbardton was comprised of Vermont's Col. Seth Warner with a detachment of his Green Mountain Boys; a detail of Massachusetts militipa under Col. Ebenezer Francis, and a few New Hampshire men. The pursuing British units of Gen. John Burgegne's Army were seasoned Regulars, far superior to the Americans in equipment

The pursuing British units of Gen. John Burgerne's Army were seasoned Regulars, far superior to the Americans in equipment and supplies. They were led by Gen. Simon Fraser for of Burgoyne's best line officers. Fraser was ably Supported by a detachment of Brunswick troops under Gen. Baron von Riedesel, a thoroughly competent field officer.

In spite of the odds against them, this little band of Americans, with the outstandingly capable leadership of Colonels Warner and Francis, put up such a furious defensive action at Hubbardton that their purpose was achieved. They then retired easterly into the Green Mountain wilderness.

So heavy were the losses inflicted upon Gen. Fraser's command, that he gave up the pursuit of St. Clair's army, and returned to Fort Ticonderoga. Thus Burgoyne's plan to invade New England from the west, was foiled in its first stage. The Battle of Hubbardton, though a small military action by itself, marked the beginning of the end for Gen. "Gentleman Johnny" Burgoyne, who surrendered three months later at Saratoga, with his entire army of some 8,000 men.
