used for a while after the fort was abandoned and deteriorated. Some were sold and moved to different parts of Eastport. Part of the barracks building remains standing and is located at 74 Washington Street, where it was moved about 100 years ago.

The only remaining part of Fort Sullivan itself which can be found on the original site is the Powder Magazine. The local high school and municipal auditorium are now found on the site.

Shore batteries connected with Fort Sullivan were placed at strategic locations around Moose Island.

A Regents Redoubt to defend against possible land force attacks from the Northwast was located a few hundred yards from the fort.

The original measurements of the Fort Sullivan enclosure, according to Lt. Col. G. Nichols, Commander of the Royal Engineers at Moose Island in July of 1814, were 610' by 375'. This amounts to an area of about five acres enclosed by walls.

A report of November 1, 1815, taken from the Public Archives of Canada and condensed read as follows: The Ordinance Report on Forts, batteries, buildings and field ordinance at Moose Island, 1 November 1815, included an American (sea) battery, two other batteries, three blockhouses, one of which was American, a store magazine, and an artillery storehouse at Fort Sherbrooke (the British name for Fort Sullivan) and the unfinished Regents Redoubt

Today there remains on the original site the store magazine (powder magazine) This is located on an area of less than one acre owned by the Border Historical Society, Inc. The Officers Barracks building was removed from its original place inside the Fort Sullivan walls some 100 years ago. It was placed on a foundation located today at 74 Washington Street and was until 1966 used as a dwelling house - the so called "Look Property." This was purchased by the Border Historical Society, Inc. in 1966. It has been restored and now serves as a museum and the official headquarters of the Border Historical Society, Inc. This building is located on a city lot which is less than one acre in area.

Continuation of Statement of Significance:

Ghent dated December 24, 1814, but the British did not relinquish this position until 1818.

The Fort Sullivan site remained idle until 1838. At this time a boundary dispute in Aroostook County, Maine with New Brunswick was leading in the direction of war again with Great Britain. Militia companies did occupy the Fort Sullivan complex for short periods between 1838-1839. The Northeastern Boundary Dispute or "Aroostook War" so-called was settled by an International Commission on March 23, 1829. Fort Sullivan since that time has not been used for formal military purposes.
