DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Tavern is a two story English type structure with double galleries and unusual column design.

The upper gallery is enclosed by balusters. The contrast of the twolevel portico is interesting: the ground floor is styled with square columns, while the upper floor has delicate round columns of a classical order. Central doors flanked by two windows, both upstairs and down, present a symmetrical appearance. The door on the upper porch has only side lights, but the front entrance has side lights and transom of clear glass. Large hand-hewn timbers, $6" \times 10"$, give sturdy support to the structure. End chimneys are large, constructed of hand-made brick, and plastered. The steep gabled roof is covered with split-cedar shingles.

The Tavern was one of the few houses of the pioneer period that was built without a central hall; however, an open hallway divides the two rooms at the rear. Three large rooms run across the entire front. There was an open stairway to the second floor, but when the porch was later enclosed, it presented the appearance of a secret stairway. The carved banisters show outstanding workmanship for pioneer days. The north wing appears to be an addition; however it is part of the original structure. In early days, guests debarking from steam boats could go directly upstairs to their rooms.

The lower back room was a dining room. The 41 thick and 61 wide stone chimney still stands, but is plastered over. The flooring is 21×61 pine boards. Pegs and square nails were used in construction. Baseboards are 10" with 1-1/2" crown. The mantels are pine. Upstairs and downstairs rooms are identical in size and arrangement.

During restoration, the outside was painted light tan and trimmed in off-white.
