The Bush Homeplace is located on 6.64 acres on New Cut Road (formerly Old Blackstock Road), approximately one-and-one-half miles southwest of Inman, in Spartanburg County, South Carolina. The original house was constructed as a hall-and-parlor two-room house circa 1830, shortly after Story Bush moved to the area from Elbert County, Georgia, with her three sons. The house was subsequently enlarged circa 1850 as a three-bay I-house with a rear ell.<sup>1</sup> A property survey dated March 18, 1851 includes an architectural rendering of the I-house. The Bush Homeplace is architecturally significant as an excellent example of an antebellum farmhouse in the upcountry of South Carolina. It essentially retains its form and historic character from ca. 1850 and has remained in the ownership of the Bush family continuously since circa 1830.

The house has a southwest orientation, facing New Cut Road. The immediate area is comprised of other single-family homes and agricultural property. In addition to the main house, one historic outbuilding—a smokehouse—is extant. The house possesses many of the distinguishing characteristics of an I-house although the original house, now the rear ell, was constructed as a hall-and-parlor residence. Floor joists and corner posts of the original structure are visible in the crawl space and attic, respectively, and exhibit hand-hewn characteristics. Posts, beams and sheathing boards within the I-house segment exhibit the perpendicular saw marks made by a water-powered saw mill. The conversion of the residence to the I-house with rear ell included a distinctive hipped roof front porch and central entry. The I-House segment consists of two rooms with central hall on the first floor and two bedrooms with central hall on the second floor. The façade is elaborated with Greek Revival detailing at the front door with a transom and sidelights. The single-story front porch has a hipped roof supported by square piers and a turned balustrade. The exterior cladding is weatherboard siding with stone and concrete foundation walls. The roof is lateral-gabled with prominent stone and brick chimneys flanking the side elevations. The chimneys have stone blocks inscribed with the date 1871 and the names "Jim Ray" (on the south elevation) and the date 1876 and the names "J.B. Ray" and "J.D. Weston" and the initials "B.F.B." (on the north elevation) "B.F.B." stands for Bibby Franklin Bush, a son of Story Bush who inherited the property in 1852.<sup>2</sup> According to members of the Bush family, it is believed that the chimneys were rebuilt during this time by a friend of the family named Jimmy Ray.<sup>3</sup> This would account for the use of two different materials—stone for the chimneys and brick for the stacks. At the rear and in the form of an ell is the one-story hall-and-parlor segment with a gable roof and a large stone chimney with brick stack. The rear porch is intact as documented with historic photographs and served as the front entry to the original hall-and-parlor residence. The historic photographs also indicate a wood-shake roof which is presently covered with asphalt composition shingles. Remnants of sawn cedar shingles and pine roof lath are found in the attic.

The windows are rectangular with double-hung sashes; paired windows with four-over-four panes are on the front elevation. The side and rear elevation windows are nine-over-six or six-over-six panes with the exception of two windows with four-over-four panes that flank the chimney in the original hall-and-parlor structure.

The interior of the house is characterized by a central hall adjoining the living room and the master bedroom. The central hall has heart pine flooring, eight inch baseboard molding and wood-plank walls; its focal point is a simple reverse staircase with landing and unturned balustrade with chamfered newel. Throughout the first floor the ceilings are ten feet in height. The focal point of the living room is the fireplace with its distinctive, original mantel. The fireplace is flanked by large nine-over-six windows. The ceiling light fixture in the living room was added in the 1920s when the house was wired for electricity. The living room walls are plaster and the floors are hardwood with eight inch baseboard molding. French doors, each leaf with ten lights, open to the dining room which was part of the original hall-and-parlor structure. The dining room also has hardwood floors with eight inch baseboard molding. The other room of the original two-room structure is utilized today as a kitchen and has the original wood-plank ceilings, original window frames with replacement four-over-four light sash, and the original vertical plank door with three beveled cross-braces and hand-wrought iron hinges and pintels, as well as box lock that provides access to the porch [current rear porch]. The fireplace in the kitchen has a large stone hearth extending to the basement floor and built into the stacked stone foundation wall. Its federal style mantel features paneled pilasters and an elliptical sunburst at its central panel. The master bedroom is located downstairs and is accessed from the central hall. This room has retained much of its original character with wood-plank ceilings, heart pine flooring and eight inch baseboard molding. The fireplace has the original mantel and is flanked by two nine-over-six pane windows. Two other bedrooms are located upstairs and have wood plank walls and nine-foot ceilings. The floors are heart pine and were previously painted at an undetermined date. Both upstairs bedrooms have their original fireplace mantels.

Alterations to the house have been limited and have been sensitive to its historic character. The expansion of the circa 1830 hall-and-parlor structure to an extended I-house circa 1850 was the most significant alteration. The I-house additions are historically significant and have become an excellent representation of an upcountry antebellum farmhouse that was transformed to meet the changing needs of the owners. The current owners are descendants of the original owners and have been sensitive to the historic character of the house. Alterations have been minor and are mostly limited to interior, cosmetic changes including upgrading the kitchen and bathroom. There is a small one-room addition on the north elevation of the original hall-and-parlor structure that was carefully planned by the current owners. This location was chosen so that the historic outbuilding to the rear of the main house would not be adversely impacted. The addition is an appropriate scale to the rest of the house and the exterior materials and details complement the historic exterior. The addition has lapped weatherboard siding and six-over-six windows that do not disrupt the historic façade. The addition's gabled roof and simple porch also complement the roof lines of the historic structure.

In addition to their sensitive rehabilitation of the house, the current owners have carefully rehabilitated an historic outbuilding behind the main structure. The outbuilding is a small lateral-gabled structure with lapped weatherboard siding, and has a door and window with what appears to be original hardware. The roof features exposed rafter tails and is clad with V-crimp metal sheathing of undetermined age. According to the family, the outbuilding was used as a smokehouse and for storage in recent years. Like the main residence, the outbuilding retains its historic character and complements the historic setting of the Bush Homeplace.

The Bush Homeplace is an excellent example of an upcountry antebellum farmhouse that was enlarged to meet the changing needs of a prominent Spartanburg County family. The architecture and construction of the house is representative of an adaptable and expandable type of residence that was popular with rural homeowners during the nineteenth century. The characteristics of the original hall-and-parlor structure are still evident with the two unequal rooms that served multiple functions and the exterior end-chimney. The house was enlarged on one end and in a perpendicular fashion to include a two-story I-house by the mid-nineteenth century as the family expanded. The transformation of the hall-and-parlor house to a modified I-house is architecturally significant as an example of two architectural forms that were once prevalent in the rural upcountry of South Carolina. The Bush Homeplace has been continuously in the ownership of the Bush family or its descendants since circa 1830. Story Bush and her three sons built a two-room, hall-and-parlor residence and began working a farm that would eventually become one of Spartanburg County's most significant farms in the nineteenth century, with approximately 1,115 acres under the ownership of her descendants.<sup>4</sup>

The land upon which the Bush Homeplace stands fronts New Cut Road (formerly Old Blackstock Road). Old Blackstock Road is one of Spartanburg County's oldest roads and originally linked the Block House Fort, in Tryon, N.C., to the upper Piedmont of South Carolina.<sup>5</sup> Prior to the first settlements in the upcountry, Old Blackstock Road was known as the Yemassee Trail and was used extensively by Indian traders and merchants exchanging with the Indians of the region "guns, ammunition, and other articles of convenience and comfort, for skins and guns and furs which they carried with them on their return to Charleston, and which were exported to different parts of the world."<sup>6</sup> The Yemassee Trail eventually became known as Old Blackstock Road in Spartanburg County, and according to local tradition, was either named for a family residing on the road or was named for the lore that it was black in autumn with the many head of black Angus cattle that were moved in herds along the road. As settlers moved into the upcountry, homesteads were located along the trail where there was a ready market for their corn and other products by supplying drovers with feed for their herds.<sup>7</sup>

The site of the Bush Homeplace was originally part of a larger tract of land granted to Peter Lewis by North Carolina Governor William Tryon and willed to Ephriam Lewis and later Joel Lewis. A survey completed for Story Bush in 1839 references the earlier ownership by Joel Lewis. According to family history, Story Bush constructed the original two-room house circa 1830, shortly after acquiring the property.

Story Bush conveyed the house and property to her son Bibby Franklin Bush on August 2, 1852. The deed provided for a life estate for Story Bush, and she continued to live at the Bush Homeplace until her death in 1861.<sup>8</sup> A survey dated March 18, 1851, likely prepared for this transaction, shows a two-story structure resembling the extant I-house. The illustration of the two-story residence upon the survey is consistent with the family history that states that the house was enlarged around 1850. At that time the house was expanded on one end to include a two-story I-house with a one-story hipped roof front porch. In addition to the house, B.F. Bush was conveyed 43 acres. He acquired additional land over the next several decades and became a prominent farmer in Spartanburg County with total land holdings of approximately 1,155 acres. Although B. F. Bush primarily farmed cotton and corn, he also operated a cotton gin, corn mill and saw mill on the property, and his extensive livestock holdings included horses, sheep, cattle and hogs, according to his will.<sup>9</sup> B.F. Bush married a distant cousin, Catherine Elizabeth Martin. Catherine Martin was a granddaughter of Edward Bomar, one of Spartanburg County's first settlers. Edward Bomar played a significant role in the early history of Spartanburg County after relocating there from Halifax County, Virginia, in 1796. B. F. and Catherine Bush had nine children, with three dying in infancy. B. F. Bush died on June 2, 1890 at the age of 65. His obituary appeared in the Carolina Spartan and stated that he "accumulated considerable property" and "the young farmers of the community will miss him, for in his death, a broad-minded, generous-hearted, man and humble, trusting, Christian has been taken away."<sup>10</sup> Catherine Bush and her children continued to reside at the Bush Homeplace until her death in 1896. The ownership of the property was then transferred to the only surviving son, John Cleveland Bush. John married Dateria Blanch Henderson in 1900. Following the death of John Cleveland Bush, the property was inherited by Dateria Henderson Bush. She continued to reside at the Bush Homeplace, raising her ten children in the home. Dateria died in 1960 and the property was conveyed to her youngest daughter, Edna Bush Clarke. Dateria Clarke Johnson is named for her grandmother, Dateria Blanch Henderson Bush.

The Bush Homeplace is now the home for Dateria Clarke Johnson and her husband William Dixon Johnson. They have carefully rehabilitated the house in a sensitive manner to ensure that its historic character has been retained.
