DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Medway, built in 1686, only 16 years after the founding of the colony, and now the oldest house in South Carolina of record, is in plan and situation pretty typical of the plantation houses to be built in the Low Country for the next hundred years. Originating at Medway was the sort of Janus-like, facing-both-ways scheme of a house with both a river prospect and a landside entrance, a situation common to the region.

The direct entrance into a large hall, the principal room in the house that takes a lion's share of the house front, is another characteristic that remained in vogue up to the time of the Revolution.

Located on the Medway, or Back, River, the house was built by Jan Van Arrsens, Seigneur de Weirnhoudt, who led a small company of Hollanders to Carolina. Dutch architecture is most obvious in the stepped gables of the original house, and the influence of Van Arrsens' architecture, although thoroughly encisted in additions, has kept the house looking as though it had as good a right to be standing over a canal in the Low Countries of Holland as besides rice fields in the Low Country of Carolina. The second story added to the original building obviously copied its stepped gables, and though these were thrown down in the earthquake of 1886, the late Samuel Gaillard Stoney was able to follow old pictures and replace them 20 years afterwards. The low, spreading wings on the riverfront are also later additions, but they reflect the feeling of the old work so much as to seem a part of it. Even Peter Gaillard Stoney's unsymmetrical wing, built out towards the avenue in 1855, ties in with the style of the original Van Arrsens building. A very thorough recent changing of the simple interior has been effected also without any great difference to the outer look of the old house.

In a colony only 16 years old, Medway was a fairly capacious dwelling with some pretense to esthetics in style and more than a pretense to esthetics in its pleasant situation. The home-made brick is chracteristically bad, so bad that the walls were reputed to stand by the strength of the oyster shell mortar only. The stuccoing was an obvious attempt to remedy, or at least mitigate, this failing. It also is typical of early work. In the additions, the brick is much improved. (According to Macaulay, all brick that was made in England in those times was bad, including the brick Sir Christopher Wren had to use in his work. In Carolina, there is plenty of evidence that Van Arrsens was not alone in burning home-made brick for house-building and also that experiments were being made with other materials.)

Medway's older plantings come from three women of the Marion-DuBose-Stoney connection that owned the place nearly a century and a quarter. Mrs. DuBose, after 1825, planted the larger oaks about the house. Her sister, Mrs. Peter Gaillard Stoney, planted the avenues in 1855. And Louisa Cheves Stoney, after 1905, restored old gardens and planted new ones, notably the terraced lawn between the avenues with its framing of azaleas. After 1930, Mr. and Mrs. Legendre added extensively to the gardens and the out buildings.

The enclosed sheet shows the Medway floor plans and elevations as measured by Albert Simons, FAIA, and drawn by Frank E. Seel. These include probable arrangement of house as built by Jean Van Arrsens.

"Carolina Gray" brick. At Parnassus Plantation, down stream from Medway, Zachary Villepontoux made excellent brick to build St. Michael's Church in Charleston. In the 19th century, Medway itself enjoyed a sound economic mixture of agriculture and industry by making rice while the weather was hot and brick when it was cold. Peter Gaillard Stoney sent thousands of the latter down to the building of the famous Fort Sumter.

- 5. Medway was the setting for The Treasure of Peyre Gaillard, a novel by John Bennett.
- 6. After World War II, "The Medway Plan" was developed here for American cities to adopt and help rehabilitate French towns.
