A black and white photograph of the entrance to a County Jail. The entrance is framed by two large, dark, fluted columns. Above the columns is a decorative pediment with a triangular roof. A sign above the double doors reads "COUNTY JAIL". The building has a light-colored facade with some wear and tear, particularly on the columns and the steps leading up to the entrance. There are windows on either side of the entrance, some with dark shutters or grilles. A small number "7" is visible on the left wall. A pipe runs vertically down the center of the building above the pediment.
