The City of Maryville was largely destroyed during the Civil War by fire. The buildings of Maryville College were then located in the center city area and were also lost. Following the War, steps were taken to reestablish Maryville College. These efforts culminated in the construction of Anderson Hall in 1869 and Memorial Hall and Baldwin Hall in 1870. Baldwin Hall was torn down earlier in this century. Anderson Hall has served as administrative and classroom space continuously since its opening. Memorial Hall still houses male students as it did in 1870.

The College had an enrollment of only 2 college students in 1867 plus 43 preparatory students. However, through the efforts of its president, Isaac Anderson, John Center Baldwin, William Thaw, and General O. O. Howard, the College began to prosper. Howard's efforts included the procurement of $16,000 from the Freedman's Bureau in behalf of Negro education. The College has been coeducational since 1867. By 1880 the enrollment had expanded to over 200 students.

Memorial Hall was named to commemorate the union of New and Old Presbyterians. Anderson Hall was named for Dr. Issac Anderson who started the college in 1819. Although the use of the word "college" was employed in describing the institution, there were only a minority of college students during the later 19th century. As Maryville did not have public schools after the Civil War, the Preparatory School of Maryville College largely filled that gap. The Preparatory School included grades 5 through 12. In 1925 with academic and athletic expansion in the college division, the Preparatory School was phased out.

Anderson and Memorial Halls are extremely important to the city of Maryville, representing two of the most outstanding architectural landmarks of the city, in addition to the vital part the college played in the educational realm during the critical period following the Civil War.

irrespective of wealth, race, or color.

In 1867, the Directors of the College issued the following policy statement regarding integration of the races:

Thus it is clearly seen that the educational policy of the College has been long established and fully made known to the world as irrevocable...And we do hereby reaffirm our adoption of this policy and declare it to be our sincere purpose to execute it impartially and honestly, and strictly enjoin it upon the faculty and teachers of the College to do nothing, by word or deed, directly or indirectly, seeming evasion or equivocation, to produce the impression that the coeducation of the races in Maryville College is any longer a debatable question.

After liberation of the slaves the United States Government established a Freedmen's Bureau, through which appropriations were made to aid the new "freedmen." Private as well as public schools were eligible to receive funds; and when Maryville College reported the Directors' policy decision of 1867, General Oliver C. Howard who was in charge of the Bureau, sent in February 1868, an initial sum of $3,000. General Howard later assigned a representative to Maryville to make an inspection of the work of the College, and within the next two years or so appropriated first $10,000 and then $3,000 toward the erection of Anderson Hall, making a total of $16,000 from the U. S. Government. For each of these grants the following receipt was signed:

The Trustees of Maryville College hereby acknowledge receipt of $ from the Freedmen's Bureau, to be used or distributed as that the funds herein referred to shall be forever appropriated to the education of loyal refugees and freedmen and their descendents.

Within a month after the Directors' 1867 policy statement, William Thaw of Pittsburgh sent $1,000, which during the ensuing year was increased by him to $4,000, and multiplied many times in the next three decades. He later said more than once that the opening of the doors to Negro students "was the cornerstone" of his interest and contributions. Other large donors, notably John C. Baldwin, William E. Dodge, Preserved Smith, who with the Freedmen's Bureau and Mr. Thaw made possible the new college plant and the first substantial endowment, likewise were influenced by this policy and the resulting admission of Negro students. A document prepared by a special committee in 1901, much of it based on information given before his death by Professor Lamar, specifically attributes to its integration policy more than $100,000 received by the College.
