DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Bordered by South Watkins Street to the west and a vacant lot to the east, the Nineteenth Century Club is situated atop a terraced lawn on the south side of Union Avenue. Three flights of concrete steps lead to the center of the balustraded terrace that links the sunporch on the east and the porte-cochere on the west to the main section of the house. Once surrounded by large residences, the building now coexists with numerous commercial establishments.

The integration of large proportions, rectangular plan, monumental balconied portico, straight window heads, hipped roof above a classical entablature and strict symmetry on the facade is an expression of the Colonial Revival style. Yet, the arched fenestration found on the first story is derived from the Beaux Arts style popular in Memphis at the turn of the century.

Of brick masonry construction laid in stretcher bond, the two-and=one-half-story main section of the structure is five bays wide. A rear wing of like construction is perpendicular to the west end of the rear elevation. Flanking the principal mass of the building are a brick sunporch on the east side containing French windows and doors and a porte-cochere supported by Tuscan columns on the west side. Both wings, one story in height under low hipped roofs of composition shingles, are recessed behind the wall plane of the facade. Linking the various portions of the building is a concrete water table.

The dominant feature of the facade is the two-story portico. Four fluted Ionic limestone columns support a classical entablature, also of limestone, highlighted by dentils and scroll-like modillions in the cornice. At the rear corners two Ionic pilasters define the entrance bay. The double leaf main door and single-light rectangular transom are framed by a projecting wood frontispiece with engaged columns which support an entablature and segmental pediment. The window on either side of the frontispiece has a flat opening.

In the remaining bays of the facade, first-floor windows are recessed into arched openings faced with limestone and topped by a console keystone. Circular tracery decorates the arched head. Second-story windows are rectangular one-over-one sash with stone surrounds that include bracketed sills.

Aligned symmetrically with the three central bays of the facade are hipped dormers. Dormers are also located on the east and west elevations of the main section and on the rear wing (two on the west side and one the east rear elevation). Five chimneys capped in concrete on the side elevations and rear wing further accentuate the hipped roof.

Behind the porte-cochere is a two-story bay with a bowed front containing one-overone sash windows of curved glass. In the center of the rear elevation a curved threestory bay contains five transomed one-over-one sash stained glass windows arranged in a ribbon-like pattern. Stucco covers the wall between the second and third stories. A later one-story addition used for storage has been added to the eastern section of the rear elevation, next to the three-story bay.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Nineteenth Century Club is one of the show places of Memphis. Built in 1907 by Rowland Jones Darnell, the house has had few major alterations, but has had three significant additions in its seventy-one years of existence. However, the facade remains essentially the same.

In the 1890's, when the supply of eastern and western hardwood was becoming depleted, Memphis attracted attention as a point of access to huge stands of virgin timber in the lower Mississippi Valley. Capital investment in mills increased rapidly. By the turn of the century, lumber was challenging cotton as the city's financial base. Huge quantities of white oak, walnut gum, hickory, ash, cypress, poplar, cottonwood, and yellow pine were exported around the world.

Rowland Darnell was one of the pioneer lumbermen of the North who realized the value of the southern hardwoods. He came to Memphis in 1880 after working with lumber companies in Indianapolis and St. Louis. A year later Darnell formed a partnership with his father, under the firm name of I.M. Darnell & Son. In 1898 the son withdrew from the firm and established his own business at 1089 Florida Avenue. He was the president of Darnell-Love Lumber Company; a member of the National Lumber Exporters' Association; and vice-president of the local Lumberman's Club. Mr. Darnell was not a society or club man, preferring the quiet associations of his home life. He died in June, 1916; but his family remained in the mansion on Union for one more year.

The house was then occupied by A. R. Orgil, the city sales manager of Orgill Brothers Hardware Company. He lived there only one year; the mansion is listed as being vacant in the 1919 city directory. For the next five and a half years the Darnell Mansion was the residence of Leslie Martin Stratton, a hardware dealer, whose business, like Mr. Darnell's was located on Florida Avenue. In 1920 his former business, L.M. Stratton & Company, a wholesale grocery house, was consolidated with the W. C. Early Company and renamed the Early-Stratton Company. Constant expansion of the trade as the result of the most progressive and practical methods made his business one of the largest in its line in the mid-south. Mr. Stratton also served as director of the Union and Planter's Bank and Trust Company, president of the YMCA (for whom the downtown branch is named), and treasurer of the Methodist Hospital. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of the Leath Orphanage, thehoomsty election commission, the Board of Advisors for the YWCA, and St. John's Methodist Church, where he was very active.

The Nineteenth Century Club secured the house in 1926 and added a 700-seat auditorium, known as the Taliesyn Ballroom. The club also added a tea room and a swimming pool. The organization, formed in 1890, has served the women of Memphis by promoting the civic, cultural, philanthropic and educational advantages of the Memphis community. Today the house remains in the ownership of the club, although the ballroom has been razed to make
