Description

The Jameson Cafe stands next to the Jameson Gas Station on Highway 367 in the small White County town of Bald Knob and is almost identical to it in design and method of construction. Like the gas station, the cafe is clad in brick, has several English Revival features, and was built in the early 1930's. With no additions and only a few slight alterations, the cafe's integrity is intact and it is in good condition. It is now being used as a specialty retail store.

The structure has a T-shaped plan and is one story in height. Its single dominant front gable has stucco and half-timbering on the end, which is a characteristic of English Revival designs, as are the six-paned casement windows located around each elevation and the multi-paned french door at the front entrance. The large, single-paned stationary window on the front (south) elevation is a new alteration, replacing what was likely either a set of casement windows or a multi-paned stationary window.

The six-paned casement windows have multi-paned transoms above, as does the french door, which is also surrounded by casement sidelights. The building's continuous foundation is made of cast concrete; its gable roof is covered in composition shingles and has a slight overhang.

Significance

As a sister structure to the Jameson Gas Station, the Jameson Cafe can also be considered locally significant under National Register Criterion C for embodying a popular design preference that is no longer common. As a relatively new entity in the 1930's, roadside cafes and gas stations often exhibited some of the period's more common architectural elements, but few used the English Revival style, and no others survive in White County that did so, which makes this structure and the gas station even more significant.

As stated in Historic Context 4: Boom and Bust: The War and Depression Years, the period of time between the World Wars saw many changes in transportation, which led to changes not only in the built environment but in the lifestyles of residents as well. As roads improved and more people bought cars, roadside eating establishments were constructed to accommodate hungry travellers, causing a general shift in the types of commercial buildings being built. Locating a cafe next to a gas station was an acknowledgement that economic progress meant keeping up with the new mobility. The Jameson Cafe (and the Jameson Gas Station) is the best extant representative of this trend in White County.
