Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Chestertown Armory is located on the southeast edge of Chestertown in an area of mixed agricultural and medium heavy industrial uses. The brick structure is two stories tall with full basement, and emulates a medieval fortification. Attached to the rear of the 2-story main block is a narrower one-story drill hall. A modern one-story brick garage has been added at the rear of the drill hall. Very nearly the entire building has been coated with white paint; details of original brick work and trim are thereby largely obliterated.

The front (Quaker Neck Road) facade, oriented to the north is composed of two, two-bay wide sections which flank a central entranceway itself flanked by two-story towers. The side sections contain two basement windows, 4/3 casement under 4/4 casement under 4/2 panels on the first floor and 4 pane horizontal strips on the second floor. Single strip buttresses run between the windows the entire height of the side sections.

At the center of the front facade, two-story towers project slightly from the front wall plane containing 2/4 casement windows at basement level, 2/4 casement under 2/2 panel at first floor, 2/4 casement under 2 pane horizontal strip at second floor. Centered at the top of the towers are small square stone panels.

The entry is composed of double doors recessed 3-4 feet under an unpainted stone segmental arch. At second floor level 4/4 casement windows under a 4 pane horizontal strip are flanked by 2/4 casement windows under 2 pane horizontal strips. The windows are surmounted by a second segmental arch, also unpainted, projecting 1-2 feet in front of the arch over the door. A band of painted stone molding crosses the center and the center top ends slightly above the roofline of the flanking towers. A small square stone panel is centered just under the roofline of the center section.

A long asphalt topped ramp with stuccoed side walls leads from the street to the front doors.

The west side of the central block contains two windows in the southwest corner, 4/3 casement under 4 pane horizontal strips. At first floor level are two windows, also in the southwest corner, 4/4 casement under under 3/2 stationary panels. At third floor level are three windows, one per bay, 4/4 casement under 4 pane horizontal strips. Four strip buttresses, two bracketing the ends of the center block side and two between the three bays, run from water table to roof.

The east side of the center block is identical to the west side except that the basement level retains all 3 windows, and the first floor has two windows, one rear and one toward the facade. Two windows at first floor level occur in the rear and forward bays.

The rear one story drill hall over full basement is seven bays long punctuated by strip buttresses. Basement windows occur two per bay, 5/2 stationary panels with stone sills and tops under the line of stone molding corresponding to that of the water table on the front block. At first floor level are two windows per bay, 3/5 stationary panels with flat brick arches and brick sills. In the second to last bay metal stairs give access to first floor doors. The east and west sides of the drill hall are identical.

The rear wall of the drill hall reveals a lightly pitched gable roof. A one story brick garage and fenced motor compound seal the rear from the road.
