DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Dakota State College and Egan Avenue form the core of the proposed Madison Historic District. It is a T-shaped area which includes all of Egan Avenue from 4th to 7th Streets and all of 6th Street from Egan Avenue to Washington Avenue. The boundaries are determined by the preponderance of outstanding buildings associated with the college and men of importance in the community. Surrounding blocks also possess some quality buildings, but the presence of intrusions and alterations weakens the district concept, so they have been excluded.

A tributary of the Big Sioux River runs through the proposed district. Great care has been taken to make this creek a viable contribution to Madison. The banks of the creek have been braced with stone. A park with wooden and stone bridges and pine trees significantly enhance the district.

Another attribute is the preponderance of old barns within the proposed district; most have been converted to garages, but the basic designs remain. Egan Avenue features a grassy boulevard that divides the two-way street. A few stone retaining walls are seen along this avenue also. A variety of evergreen and shade trees add to the area's appeal.

Twenty-seven buildings line the proposed district. Fourteen are well preserved and four are considered period examples. Seven buildings blend into the proposed district, but one structure is distracting and one is classified as very distracting.

Among the primary buildings are examples of Italianate, Neo-Classical, Queen Anne, Stick and Romanesque styles of architecture. A few of these primary buildings are discussed below.

518 North Egan Avenue is the location of the only Stick style house in Madison. The two and one-half story home has high pitched gable roofs and a pyramidal turret roof in the southwest corner of the building. Horizontal wood siding and shingles cover the exterior. Ornamentation includes bargeboards in the peaks and dormers, and a band of shingles separating the first and second stories of the house. A large porch was part of the original structure but was removed recently. Charles Smith and George Farmer were early owners.

Located within the proposed district is Dakota State College. The three Romanesque style buildings on campus possess architectural significance. They are described below.

East Hall is a four story cut granite structure with a conical turret on the southeast corner. A large Romanesque arch covers the front (south) entrance, and round headed openings encase the windows. The high pitch gables rise above the roof, which is covered with metal sheeting. Built in 1901, the building once served as a women's dormitory, but is now office space.

Directly west of East Hall are Kennedy and Beadle Halls, respectively. Beadle and Kennedy Halls originally were identical in design except for the location of the turrets with pyramidal terminations. The Kennedy Hall turret deteriorated and was dismantled, but all the stones were marked and kept in hope that money would be available later for reconstruction. In addition to turrets, both buildings have truncated hip roofs. Large Romanesque arches cover the main (south) entrances and windows are round headed with keystones. Cut stone lugsills and lintels decorate the double sash windows. Kennedy Hall was built in 1904 and has a modern two story addition on the north. Beadle Hall was constructed in 1886 and houses classrooms and offices.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Madison, South Dakota, is an example of a nineteenth century Midwestern railway town. Madison acquired its first residents and buildings from towns doomed when bypassed by the railroad. The towns of Old Madison and Herman relinquished their status and formed Madison at a point halfway between the two in 1880.

Charles B. Kennedy and others fought to establish in Madison the first teachers' education school in the Dakotas. They succeeded on March 5, 1881, when Dakota Normal School was founded. The college originally was called Dakota Normal, but was known as Madison Normal School until 1921, when the name was changed to Eastern State Normal School. In January, 1947, General W.H.H. Beadle, an early college president and champion of Dakota Schools, was honored for his contributions to education when the institution was renamed General Beadle State Teachers College. In February, 1964, "Teachers" was removed from the official name. On July 1, 1969, the school received its present name in an effort to recover the original designation.

Together, Madison and Dakota State College have struggled for survival from the beginning. On February 4, 1886, the College's only building burned. Citizens of Madison wished to rebuild and maintain the college, which was a valuable addition to the town. Bonds were sold and an appropriation was obtained to rebuild the college. After its reconstruction, Dakota State College attracted many students to Madison.

In addition to the college, the historic district has housed numerous prominent Madison families. Charles J. Porter, owner of 621 North Egan Avenue, was an early Madison attorney, postmaster, state's attorney, county judge and mayor. Charles Smith and George Farmer were former owners of the home at 705 North Egan Avenue. Both men were lawyers in Madison. R.C. McCallister was instrumental in obtaining an appropriation from the territorial legislature of 1883 to construct the first college building in Madison. He built the Stick style house at 518 North Egan Avenue. Charles B. Kennedy owned the land upon which Madison rests. He donated twenty acres to the State Normal School; his generosity was rewarded when Kennedy Hall was named for him. Kennedy was one of twelve delegates sent to Washington, D.C. to persuade Congress to pass an act dividing Dakota Territory into two states. General William Henry Harrison Beadle served as president of the college, Territorial superintendent of public education in Dakota and incorporated the school lands section in South Dakota's constitution. Prominent families continue to reside in this area.

National Register of Historic Places Continuation Sheet

In the 1974 National Register nomination for the Madison Historic District, the period of significance was 1879 to 1920. The designations for properties were contributing, good, blending, distracting and very distracting. As these are terms that are no longer appropriate and lend themselves to great confusion, a re-evaluation has been completed on the district.

In re-evaluating the district, it has been determined that the period of significance should date from 1879 to 1920, the time when the last contributing buildings in the district were constructed. This has not changed from the original nomination in 1974. The district is significant for its architectural merit as well as its contribution to the development of education in Madison. The main architectural influences in the district include: Queen Anne, Colonial Revival, and Romanesque Revival.

The evaluations of the buildings were based on their condition at the time of listing in 1974. Only 9 buildings have changed status. These include: Kennedy Hall which has been demolished, 510 N Egan, 609 N Egan, 705 N Egan, 709 N Egan, 725 N Egan, 620 Harth Avenue, 620 Lee Avenue and 621 Washington Avenue, all of which have had significant alterations. After the 2002 re-evaluation, there are 18 contributing buildings, 12 non-contributing buildings and 1 contributing site.

1. 500 N Egan Avenue, constructed 1900
Madison, Lake County
Contributing
2. 510 N Egan Avenue, constructed circa 1890
Madison, Lake County
Non-Contributing

According to the 1974 nomination, this property was considered blending. Since 1974, the house has had all new windows installed, enclosed the front porch and made a large addition to the rear which extends to the north elevation.

According to the 1974 nomination, this house was considered contributing. Since that time, the windows on the house have been reduced in size and the front porch has been altered. Also, a large non-contributing garage was added to the south of the house.

13. 709 N Egan Avenue, constructed circa 1940
Madison, Lake County
Non-Contributing

In 1974, the house was listed as blending. The period of significance ends in 1920 so this house is outside the period of significance.

14. 715 N Egan Avenue, constructed circa 1915
Madison, Lake County
